

ROYAL RECEPTION TO PYTHIAN OFFICERS

Thursday afternoon and evening has passed into local fraternal history as the date of one of the most important events held in Ulster county, when the members of the order of Knights of Pythias in the county gathered and extended a royal greeting to the Supreme Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias of the world and to the Grand Chancellor of the state of New York, who were the guests of honor of Franklin Lodge, No. 37, Knights of Pythias. The grand officers left today for Yonkers where they will also make an official visit.

The lodge rooms of Franklin Lodge on Wall street were kept open all afternoon and evening in order to accommodate the visiting knights who had assembled to welcome the grand officers and everything was done by the local lodge to provide for their comfort. Shortly after four o'clock that afternoon the large reception committee consisting of past chancellors of the Knights of Pythias gathered at the lodge rooms and motioned to the West Shore station to welcome Brig H. Young, the supreme head of the order, and William Grossman, grand chancellor of the state, and escorted them to the Stuyvesant Hotel where dinner was served.

The past chancellors who had been appointed members of the reception committee to welcome the grand officers were the Hon. C. N. DeWitt, Mayor Canfield, Frank Byer, Ary Bush, Egbert Bell, Asa Bishop, W. B. Bell, Ira Britt, Guy C. Crosby, Alfred DuFon, Walter DeGraft, Egbert Decker, H. L. Davis, S. L. Gray, George Giles, W. B. Hotelling, John Jordan, John E. Kraft, J. V. Merrihew, George H. Mericle, J. J. Midgah, Frank Miller, T. J. Rifenbary, Jay W. Rifenbary, William H. Riel, B. T. Saulpaugh, Sr., B. T. H. Kleber, Frederick Krus, Isaac Fuller, William C. Ohley, Eugene Lazarus, Andrew Simmons, George Garrison and Sanford Cross.

It was impossible for all of the reception committee to be on hand to welcome the grand officers but as many as were able attended.

Many of the visiting knights registered in the visitor's book at the Franklin Lodge rooms and those registered up to five o'clock were: George Van Wagenen, Bertram Evans, Ralph Van Wagenen, George W. Garrison, George LeFevre, L. Watkins, Eli V. Evans of Allenville, Floyd B. Garrison of Ellenville, Edward Young, A. J. Booth, W. I. Staples, J. O. Shurtler, F. W. Vredenburg and Leo A. Badner of Marlborough.

North American Lodge of Saugerties was represented at the public mass meeting at the Y. M. C. A. hall in the evening by a large delegation. Among those present from Saugerties were Irving Smith, Fred Kraus, Conrad Yackel, Abram Holsapple, Floyd G. Lewis, Lewis Koch, Percy Martin, George McClary, Charles Myer, Fred Brand, Andrew Simmons, Myer Abel, Edwin Van Gabeek, Dayton Miller, Edward Kront, William Cox, Frank Clum, John Cox, George York, George Simmons, John Perks, Matthew Davenport, Thomas Clum, David Guth, Frank Relyea, Clyde Hoyer, Wilson DuBois, Harry Zellman, Charles Entrott, Ellsworth Sniffen, Louis Kleeber, John Cook, Dwight L. Martin and Charles Miller.

The Mass Meeting.
The closing exercises of the day were held in the Y. M. C. A. hall when addresses were made by the grand officers. The hall was crowded and the meeting was one of the most successful fraternal affairs ever held in Ulster county. Especially pleasing were the large number of ladies who were present.

The Hon. C. N. DeWitt of Hurley presided and was introduced by Captain B. J. Hornbeck. The others seated on the stage were Brig H. Young, supreme head of the order; William Grossman, grand chancellor of the state; Field Secretary Seism, Isaac Mendelsohn, chairman of the grand lodge law committee; Mayor Canfield, Isaac Lazarus, Fred Kraus, Chancellor William Taylor of Franklin Lodge, Captain B. J. Hornbeck and Secretary George D. Beckwith of the Y. M. C. A., who offered the invocation.

The chairman in a few brief words introduced the mayor who delivered the address of welcome.

Mayor Canfield's Address.

Mayor Canfield spoke as follows:
This is an exceptionally noteworthy occasion. It is a noteworthy occasion because it is attended by the presence of persons prominent not only in Pythianism but in fraternalism.

Nearly all drink out of the fountain of fraternalism. We may travel different ritualistic or other roads but they all lead to it. Other fountains may become dry and empty but this one is ever full. It has been drawn from for centuries, and very generously during the past fifty years by upwards of a million Knights of Pythias, and yet it is as broad and as deep and purer than ever.

Fraternalism is rising higher and higher every day. Its prospects

ZEPPELINS WITHIN 10 MILES OF LONDON

Second Raid Within a Short Time
Was Made Early This Morning—
Damage Slight and Only One Person Injured.

By Telegram to The Freeman.
London, April 16.—For the second time within less than thirty hours Zeppelin airships raided England early today, dropping bombs upon half a dozen towns, but dispatches from the communities which were attacked state that very little damage was done.

Only one person, a woman, is known to have been injured by the missiles dropped from the German dirigibles. She was struck by flying debris in her home at Lowestoft.

Three Zeppelins took part in the latest raid, one of them passing within 10 miles of London. This is the nearest to this city that a German air-ship has approached.

The most damage was sustained at Lowestoft, in Suffolk on the North Sea, where a lumber yard was set on fire and a number of houses were partly destroyed by bombs which exploded in the streets.

The brunt of the attack was borne by towns in the neighborhood of the estuary of the Blackwater, in the Essex marshes about 30 miles from London and directly opposite the British naval base at Chatham. It is believed that the Germans planned to attack the British naval base, but miscalculated their way owing to the height at which the airships had to travel to avoid the high angle guns on land.

After attacking Lowestoft, the Germans dropped bombs upon Maldon, in Essex, thirty miles from London, which point was reached at midnight. Although 12 bombs were hurled only one building, a workshop, was wrecked, but glass was broken in hundreds of windows in residences and the inhabitants were scared into panic. The airship passed off in the direction of Harwich. At Harwich no bombs were dropped.

The Zeppelin squadron seems to have reached the British coast about 11 o'clock for an airship was reported as having been seen at Hull at 11:15 o'clock.

Bombs were dropped in or near Haverford Basin, Southwold and Halesworth, but aside from a few minor fires, no damage was reported. Telegrams came from about a dozen cities where the residents were reported to have been seen airships overhead, but in the panicky state of the population it is believed that many only imagined they saw dirigibles.

Altogether about one hundred bombs were dropped from the German air raiders. Whether or not the balloons all escaped safely is not positively known, but it is believed that they did.

Heavy firing was reported from Sheerness and Gravesend where airships were reported to have been seen making their way to sea.

The point nearest to London reached by the Germans was Dagenham, which is only 11 1/2 miles from Mansion House in the center of this city. A balloon passed over Dagenham at 1 o'clock, travelling very swiftly from the direction of the North Sea. A little while after it passed over Harwich.

Flashes of fire were seen in the air as the craft crossed the mouth of the harbor toward the river Crouch and proceeded toward Maldon; a second passed up the Orwell and Stour rivers toward Ipswich, while the third passed over the mouth of the Yare and bombarded Lowestoft.

Injured Riding a Bicycle.

Chieft Schantz, son of Supervisor Philip Schantz of Highland, was severely injured on Thursday while riding his bicycle to school. C. G. Hedden was turning into C. G. Lane when the two came together; the young man being pinned against an iron fence. Dr. Freston of Milton was summoned and found after the boy had been taken to his home that he had suffered a broken rib and several bruises besides a nervous shock.

Dr. Vrooman's Office Unchanged.

Dr. Vrooman will continue his present office at No. 44 Main street until May 1, when he will remove them to No. 10 Pearl street. Telephone call will remain unchanged and will be answered both day and night at the office.

Hudson River Congregationalists.

At the annual meeting of the Hudson River Association of Congregational Church, held in Poughkeepsie on Thursday, the Rev. Robert S. Smith of that city was elected moderator. The convention decided to hold its next annual meeting in Saugerties.

NEW YORK LOSES SUIT AGAINST LAWYERS

Judge Cochrane Dismisses the Complaint Against Fowler, Linson and Van Buren With $500 Costs to Each Defendant.

Judge Cochrane on Thursday handed down a decision dismissing the complaint in the suit brought by the City of New York against John J. Linson, Everett Fowler and Augustus H. Van Buren, for an accounting of money paid to them in connection with the condemnation of land for the Ashokan reservoir, and for the repayment to the city of New York of such sums as might be found to have been overpaid to them. The complaint against each of the three defendants is dismissed with costs by Judge Cochrane, who also grants an extra allowance of $500 to each of the defendants' attorneys because the case has been unusual and difficult.

The action resulted from the investigation conducted by Governor Whitman, then district attorney of New York, and the accounting asked for by the City of New York in involved payments to the defendants aggregating $350,000. The suit was commenced in June of last year about the time that Everett Fowler returned from Europe, and was tried before Judge Cochrane without a jury during the last week in December, the trial occupying three days. Senator Linson was represented by Corporation Counsel William D. Brinnier of this city; Everett Fowler was represented by Amos Van Etten; Augustus H. Van Buren was represented by his son, Alfred D. Van Buren; the corporation counsel's office of the City of New York was represented by William McMe. Spear.

Practically all the correspondence that had passed between the three defendants and the corporation counsel's office of the City of New York was introduced in evidence, as well as all the searches and abstracts of title to real estate that had been made, and also numerous other documents.

Three classes of overpayments were raised by the pleadings: charges of $50 per day each for the trial of several cases in one day or for hearings on different cases on the same day; charges for searching for legal instruments in books which did not exist in the years for which a charge for such searches was made; errors in arithmetical computations and additions.

Judge Cochrane holds that fraud and conspiracy between the three defendants, as alleged in the complaint of the City of New York, has not been proved, and that this question being the only material question the other questions are immaterial and are not passed upon. There was ample opportunity for scrutiny of the bills on the part of the City of New York, says Judge Cochrane, and he points out that the testimony shows that such scrutiny was exercised, as disclosed by correspondence and personal explanations.

In regard to duplication of charges for appearing in more than one case on the same day, he holds that the City of New York had at hand documents and facilities for ascertaining just what days were being charged for and how many charges were made for each day and that it is quite unlikely the defendants would present fraudulent bills with the certain knowledge that disclosure if not probable was at least quite possible. As to overcharges for searching title, he holds that the City of New York was paying not only for the physical labor of having the searches and abstracts made but also for the responsibility assumed by the defendants in certifying to their accuracy, and that the usual and customary methods of searching in Ulster county seems to have been followed. With regard to overpayments through error, he holds that with such a system of inspection and scrutiny as existed in the various departments of the City of New York, to the knowledge of the defendants, and with a strong probability of detection, it is scarcely conceivable that men of intelligence would have engaged in such a scheme of wrongdoing as alleged.

"The question here," says Judge Cochrane, "is not whether the bills were correct or whether overpayments may have been made but whether the defendants procured the same to be made through fraud and conspiracy. These charges have failed."

Judge Cochrane's Opinion.

Judge Cochrane's opinion in full is as follows:
Supreme Court.—The City of New York against John J. Linson, Everett Fowler and Augustus H. Van Buren. Action in equity for an accounting.

Frank K. Polk, corporation counsel, and William McMe. Spear for plaintiff.
Brinnier & Canfield for defendant.
Amos Van Etten for defendant.
Alfred D. Van Buren for defendant.
Van Buren.

The complaint alleges that during the years 1907 to 1910 inclusive, the defendants Linson and Fowler were designated by the corporation counsel of the plaintiff as special counsel to appear for and protect the interests of the plaintiff in proceedings under chapter 724 of the laws of 1905, as amended; that all of the defendants who are attorneys and counselors-at-law agreed among themselves in said years to make excessive and unlawful charges against the plaintiff and to secure as dis-

HELENE DUTRIEU TO DRIVE AUTO AMBULANCE FOR ARMY.

Mlle. Helene Dutrieu, premier aviatrice of France, already decorated by the French government, has finally given up her attempts to be appointed a member of the flying corps of the army, and now has offered her services as chauffeur on an automobile ambulance for the French Red Cross. She has been accepted and will enter the service immediately, operating a high power automobile ambulance and removing wounded soldiers from the rear line trenches to the base hospitals outside the danger zone.

bursements from the plaintiff moneys not actually disbursed, and to share in the receipts from said excessive and unlawful charges and moneys received as disbursements; and that they did make such excessive and unlawful charges and collect moneys from the plaintiff for disbursements which were not actually disbursed and for services which were not performed and divided said money for abstracts and searches representations to the plaintiff and secured the consent of the corporation counsel of the plaintiff to bills for services and disbursements and procured the taxation thereof by justices of the supreme court; that the defendants were paid large sums of money for abstracts and searches representations to the plaintiff and to various justices of the supreme court who taxed said bills that the sums represented thereby were actually disbursed although in fact the actual disbursements were much less than the sums charged as disbursements; that the defendants charged the plaintiff and were paid by it for searches and abstracts which were unnecessary and that pursuant to an agreement between themselves they divided the sums so received from the plaintiff untruthfully representing to the plaintiff that said work was necessary and proper; that the defendants presented bills for services which were duplicated and triplicated and caused the same to be approved by the plaintiff and taxed by justices of the supreme court on the false representation that the services charged therein were performed on the days set forth in said bills and that the defendants divided among themselves the excess sums received by their said acts; and that the amount thus received exceeded the sum of $100,000.

It thus appears from the complaint that the gravamen of the action is the alleged fraud and conspiracy of the defendants. No relief is sought unless any be granted to the plaintiff except such as rests exclusively on their fraudulent acts. I assume for the purposes of this case as claimed by the plaintiff that it is not necessary for it to establish fraud or collusion on the part of its own officers but it certainly is necessary to establish a fraudulent purpose on the part of the defendants. The case therefore is essentially different from the cases of The People vs. The Journal Company, 158 App. Div. 326, affirmed 213 N. Y. 1, and The People vs. Sutherland, 207 N. Y. 22. In neither of those cases was there any question of fraud or bad faith. Another essential difference is that in the cases cited charges which were the subject of the action were fixed by statute. It was only necessary to prove excessive payments. In the present case the charges which are the subject of the action were fixed by the corporation counsel. The statute in question, chapter 724 of the laws of 1905, provides in section 32 thereof that the corporation counsel may designate his assistants or other counsel and fix their compensation and that they shall be paid upon his certificate. It was under this statutory provision that the defendants Linson and Fowler acted, although under separate designations. Of course, the power of the corporation counsel to fix compensation implies the power not only to make a definite contract with the counsel thus designated but also to change or modify that contract from time to time if the exigencies of the case require or the propriety of doing so suggests itself to the corporation counsel. Hence it is necessary to prove in this case as alleged in the complaint that the corporation counsel was overreached or imposed upon or in other words that the fraud of the defendants. Mistake on the part of the corporation counsel is not a defense. Said section 32 provides for a taxation by justices of the supreme court of certain expenses in connection with acquiring real estate under the act in question and it seems to have been assumed that the provision for such taxation applied to the bills of the defendants. Linson and Fowler were charged for as disbursements and that is perhaps the main cause of the present misapprehension of the plaintiff. But whatever may have been the reason for so expressing the charge as a disbursement rather than as a charge for services rendered there can be no doubt about the fact. What the plaintiff was paying for was not merely the physical labor of inspecting the records but the personal responsibility and liability of these defendants Linson and Fowler which is procured in every instance in the form of a certificate asserting the accuracy of the search and the sufficiency of the title which the plaintiff was procuring. It is absurd to assert that with such responsibility assumed by the defendants they were to be paid only the actual disbursements incurred by themselves for labor in making these charged in some instances for several hearings on the same day. The defendants insist that by their contracts they were to be paid fifty dollars for each case, each day. The corporation counsel had the right to consent to such compensation if he thought it proper under the circumstances. The contracts were made with Mr. Sterling, the acting corporation counsel, who is now dead. Mr. Linson testifies that at a conference with Mr. Sterling on June 7, 1907, the relations between Mr. Fowler, Mr. Van Buren and himself were explained; that his first bill for $127,241.17 dated April 30, 1907, was discussed. This bill showed payments to Fowler and Van Buren for searching and abstracts of title. Mr. Linson testifies: "He (Mr. Sterling) stated expressly that a charge of $50.00 per day for a case was entirely satisfactory." He further states that Mr. Wheeler of the corporation counsel's office was present at a portion of that conversation if not all of it. Mr. Wheeler was called as a witness by the plaintiff but was not asked concerning his conversation. Mr. Fowler testifies that after his designation Mr. Sterling told him he was to proceed under the same arrangement as Mr. Linson which was $50.00 a day for each case. As a matter of fact bills were submitted containing more than one fifty dollar charge for the same day. The plaintiff says that this fact of duplication did not appear on the bills. However that may be the plaintiff clearly had at hand documents and facilities for ascertaining just what days were being charged for and how many charges were made for each day and as will be pointed out hereafter was making active and diligent use of such facilities and was from time to time investigating and satisfying itself of the propriety of the various items of charges which were being presented to it by the defendants. It is quite unlikely that the defendants knowing as they did these facts would in the face of them present fraudulent charges of this nature with the certain knowledge that disclosure if not probable was at least quite possible.

It is further claimed that charges for searches were made in excess of what the defendants paid therefor. The evidence shows quite satisfactorily that the defendants had a contract whereby they were to be paid for searches the fees which the statute permits the county clerk to pay in addition thereto for abstracts. The defendants Linson and Fowler both testified that this arrangement was made in the presence of Mr. Elison, the corporation counsel, and Mr. Dykeman who had charge of similar work for the plaintiff in Westchester county and who had large experience in such matters. Mr. Elison does not recall the conversation but it is undisputed that some such general arrangement was adopted as prevailed in Westchester county where searches were being paid for at 25 per cent less than the statutory fees of the county clerk. It is significant that later when Mr. Fowler was designated as counsel he wrote a letter to the corporation counsel, Mr. Pendleton, in which he offered to reduce the charges to 75 per cent of the statutory fees because Mr. Dykeman had only charged that amount for his searches, a letter which would be entirely meaningless unless the understanding and arrangement prior thereto had been for more than 75 per cent of the statutory fees. It is true that at first these searches were charged for as disbursements and that is perhaps the main cause of the present misapprehension of the plaintiff. But whatever may have been the reason for so expressing the charge as a disbursement rather than as a charge for services rendered there can be no doubt about the fact. Mr. Fowler testifies that after his designation Mr. Sterling told him he was to proceed under the same arrangement as Mr. Linson which was $50.00 a day for each case. As a matter of fact bills were submitted containing more than one fifty dollar charge for the same day. The plaintiff says that this fact of duplication did not appear on the bills. However that may be the plaintiff clearly had at hand documents and facilities for ascertaining just what days were being charged for and how many charges were made for each day and as will be pointed out hereafter was making active and diligent use of such facilities and was from time to time investigating and satisfying itself of the propriety of the various items of charges which were being presented to it by the defendants. It is quite unlikely that the defendants knowing as they did these facts would in the face of them present fraudulent charges of this nature with the certain knowledge that disclosure if not probable was at least quite possible.

SENATOR ALDRICH DIES IN NEW YORK

By Telegram to The Freeman.
New York, April 16.—Ex-Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, died suddenly at his home here today at the age of 74 years.

Mr. Aldrich had been in failing health for several years and had taken several ocean voyages in the hope of regaining his health. This attempt failed, but it was supposed when he returned from his last sea trip that he had been considerably benefited.

The end came suddenly today at the ex-senator's home, 98 Fifth avenue.

Mr. Aldrich had passed most of his time in New York after retiring from the U. S. senate, where he was one of the leading Republican figures for many years.

Nelson Winthrop Aldrich was one of the foremost students of financial and economic affairs that the U. S. has ever produced. During his long term in the service of the public he was identified with many important political issues, the chief of which were the tariff and monetary reform.

Mr. Aldrich was born in Foster, Rhode Island, on November 6, 1841. His mind turned toward politics and immediately after he finished his education he became active in public affairs. He was a member of the common council of Providence from 1869 to 1871 and again from 1872 to 1875.

In 1875 he was elected a member of the Rhode Island house of representatives and during 1876 and 1877 was speaker of that body.

Mr. Aldrich was first elected to congress in 1879, serving during the forty-sixth and forty-seventh terms in the house of representatives.

In 1881 Mr. Aldrich was elected to the U. S. senate to succeed Gen. A. E. Burnside, who died during his term in office. Mr. Aldrich was re-elected to the senate in 1886, 1892, 1898 and 1904. When his term expired in 1911, Mr. Aldrich declined another nomination in order to devote his time to the affairs of the national monetary commission.

Mr. Aldrich had been made chairman of the national monetary commission upon its inception in 1908 and was keenly interested in its work. He was a student of financial affairs in Europe as well as America, and made a special trip abroad to study the central banking systems over there.

Staunchness marked Mr. Aldrich's adherence to the principles of the Republican party, of which he was a life long member. He was one of the "Old Guard" of the Republican party in Chicago and was a power in the national councils of his party.

Considerable criticism was directed toward Senator Aldrich because of the Payne-Aldrich tariff, of which he was the author and also because of the stand he took upon the central bank plan. Mr. Aldrich defended the measures with which he was identified and made many speeches to set forth plainly and clearly his national financial policies.

The senator was the father-in-law of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., his daughter, Miss Abby Greene Aldrich having married the son of the oil king.

Mr. Aldrich was a man of commanding personality and in appearance greatly resembled the late oil magnate, H. H. Rogers. For many years he was the Republican floor leader in the senate and his word was law. He was very rich and maintained a residence in Providence, another in New York city as well as a country place at Warwick, R. I.

Mr. Aldrich's death followed a stroke of apoplexy he suffered yesterday afternoon, but from which it was thought he was recovering. The stroke was preceded by an attack of indigestion.

Only the Rooster Didn't.

A great deal has been said about hens laying will during the past winter but the flock of twenty-four owned by Delancey N. Mathews on Pearl street have beaten all others. One day of the past week they laid the full twenty-four eggs, one hen of the twenty-four also having hatched a brood of chicken since March 1 of this year. Mr. Mathews also has one rooster but that did not lay.

Chautauqua Tickets.

The ticket committee for the Chautauqua, are very desirous that those who signed the pledges for tickets last year, bring the proceeds for them as soon as possible. These tickets may be obtained at the office of the board of education at the new high school, or from F. M. Snyder who is making a canvass in behalf of the committee.

In City Court.

A trial was held in city court this morning in the case of Anna Safran against Isaac A. Abrahams, an action to recover for alleged damages to a building of plaintiff rented by Abrahams. The answer was a general denial. After listening to several witnesses Judge Brinnier reserved decision. A. H. Van Buren appeared for the plaintiff and W. N. Gill for defendant.

The Gardner's Trips.

The steamer E. B. Gardner will begin its regular trips to Poughkeepsie next Tuesday. The boat has just come from Baiden's drydock and is in fine condition. The Gardner will leave Rondout at 8 a. m. and Poughkeepsie at 3 p. m. for the present. Later two trips will be made a day from each point.

Caught a Surgeon.

While fishing at Eddyville on Thursday John Banks caught a surgeon measuring three feet eight inches long. The fish gave Mr. Banks a hard tussle before it was landed.

Painting the Stack.

Messrs Scott and Haight of Hudson are painting the big stack at the Ulster & Delaware railroad shops on East Strand. Their work attracts much attention from passers-by.

KINGSTON, N. Y., APRIL 16, 1915.

Walter Cook, the suffragist, has brought his great mind to bear upon the proposition that the giving of the vote to women is likely to "unsex" them. He asks: "Why doesn't that saying apply just as well to men? Why don't they, because they vote, fail to support their families and neglect their business and their children?" The answer is easy. The act of voting and of keeping in touch with public affairs is so closely related with the ordinary business of most men that it makes very little extra work for them. However, when a man becomes a zealous politician and gets to be a cog in the "machine," he does neglect his business and his family. None of us need go outside his circle of acquaintances to verify this statement. Wherever women vote large numbers of them become "practical politicians" and neglect their households. Moreover, a woman's duties are dissociated from public affairs and it is an economic waste for her to study unfamiliar issues which her men folk know all about. The general experience of human beings has shown that it is usually disastrous for a wife to meddle with the management of her husband's office affairs or for a husband to undertake to "boss" the household management. It is only through division of labor that progress is made.

The professional philanthropists are united in urging Governor Whitman to veto the bill permitting the working of women and minors over sixteen years of age for seventy-two hours a week in canning factories during the season of five months. That is too many hours for anybody to work as a regular thing, but farmers and their families have always done it in emergencies without any startlingly bad effects. Labor Commissioner Lynch, who is as friendly as anybody to the working classes, says conservatively: "I am not altogether convinced that the demand made by the canners for some additional leeway is altogether unreasonable. No one has the right to demand that they should be compelled to throw away vast quantities of perishable goods for the want of labor to put them through the necessary processes." The Commissioner thinks that the solution of the problem lies in giving his department greater discretionary powers. This is a pretty good idea, but it might be improved upon. Canners are not the only ones who are forced to stretch the law on occasion to meet emergencies, and in the great majority of cases it is impossible to deal satisfactorily at long distance with an officer in Albany. It strikes us that the discretionary power might better be lodged in local judges. Since the latter are elected by popular vote, there would be no danger that they would issue permits unjust to employees. The fact is that employees as a rule are very glad of the opportunity to make extra money by working overtime now and then. They are no more in favor of some of our restrictive laws than employers are, and the men who claim to represent them seem to be ignorant of their wishes.

To the uninitiated, New York state would appear to occupy the unique position of a commonwealth with three Governors. First, there is Martin H. Glynn. He was Governor once, but was defeated last fall. He does not blush to tell the people, the legislature and the state officers elected by the people at the time he was defeated what their duties are and how they should perform them. Then there is John Purroy Mitchell. He never has been Governor but he may have hopes. As mayor of New York city, he is showing just what State appropriations ought to be cut in order to avoid any direct tax. He knows the needs of the State more than any other man with the possible exception of Mr. Glynn. Last of all, there is Charles S. Whitman. He really is Governor, and of the three names mentioned, he alone was elected by the people as their Governor. He was chosen by a majority of the people instead of Mr. Glynn. He had explained his policies during the campaign and his attitude on State policies was understood thoroughly by the people before they elected him. Would it not be a gracious act on Governor Whitman's part to relinquish his post and let Mr. Glynn, Mayor Mitchell and a few others run the State Government? Wasn't that what the people expected when they elected him? A proposition to that effect might be submitted by the Governor to the Constitutional Convention. Of all his official acts, that surely would meet the approval of Glynn and Mitchell. Of course, the Constitutional Convention might decide that the Governor elected by the people should be Governor de facto. And popular opinion might be overwhelmingly against a Government conducted by men not chosen to govern, but since we are drifting away from popular Government, why not establish a bureaucracy headed by ex-Governor Glynn? Incidentally, if Glynn while Governor dug pits for his successor which the latter avoids, shouldn't there be some provision of the penal law under which he could be punished?

THINK IT OVER.

(By Our Woman Editor.)

The caution that bids us "sleep over it" when tempted to write a letter voicing indignation or to utter words of violent protest is mighty wholesome and must have originated with one who knew—from experience, perhaps.

It is said that Napoleon's secretary acted as the lever of sleep on that strange man of many impulses and spared him numberless anxious hours and days of serious ill by destroying letters written in an outburst of anger and impulsively ordered sent without the saving night of sleep.

What great matter, even though indignation may be justified? It hardly pays to let even righteous anger pave the way to a flood of invective that leaves one spent and disgusted the next day, when healing sleep has permitted the entrance of the fine wedge of toleration.

I read a letter the other day sharply criticizing the recipient for work that was called careless and inefficient, pointing out blunders galore, and ending with a call for better service. But the fault was all with the writer, the errors were all of his making, and momentary or more enduring indignation prompted an immediate answer in no uncertain terms.

But a night of gracious sleep brought the calm reflection that the letter doubtless sprang from nothing worse than carelessness or forgetfulness on the part of the writer, and that while it was irritating it was only an evidence of natural proneness to mistakes. It also counseled that loss of dignity and bitter feeling would be the sure results of sharp words—and so the offensive answer was buried in the calm night of sleep.

We rarely regret the harsh rebuke that was not spoken, but too often pay tribute with heavy hours of worry and self-condemnation for sharpness to which utterance is given, whether it is merited or not. If we must fight it out with someone, we can stand the abuse for a while and can afford to wait until another day shall have dawned, with its safer verdict.

And letters are so enduring. They will not permit one to forget if he would. If one might be induced to confide to paper the full strength of the grievance that is so disturbing and then destroy the paper, much of the rancor would go with it, and there would be no offensive aftermath.

It would be wearisome and curbing if words must be weighed and pondered before one ventured to give them utterance, but it seems as if one ought to be reasonably certain of the need of rebuke before administering it. Many years have come and gone since a sensitive girl was mightily shocked by the crushing and untrue remark of a teacher: "You are one of the girls never ready with your lessons!"—but the passage of time has not altogether softened the offense or lessened its injustice. It was her first failure and the work of the year was half completed.

The failure to pause for familiarity with facts led to a wrong impression; its unfairness always has rankled, and the teacher has been remembered with disdain. Just a few moments' reflection and the injustice would not have been shown.

In the home, children are ordinarily treated with consideration that leans rather heavily on the side of tolerance for their youthful flights to the land of mischief; but sometimes the "would-be-goods" are rebuked for transgressions they never commit. Born of irritation, nervousness or too much zeal for discipline, the ready "don't" falls before there is need of its weight, and often punishment follows in one form or another before there is chance for justice.

well that the children under their care, unless exceptionally strong and impervious to harsh influences, will suffer for all time.

And beside, children have pretty long memories.

When we shall have learned to sleep over our grievances, great and small, we shall find that when morning comes many of them have taken flight, happily displaced by the better vision that comes with the morning light and the clearer judgment it brings.

And meanwhile we shall have learned not to offend others by verdicts that may be unfair or at least subject to revision.

Annual Roll Call and Reunion Held on Thursday Evening.

The annual roll call and reunion supper was held Thursday evening and was much enjoyed by all. The Ladies' Work Society had provided a bountiful supper and the room was decorated with flags and the tables beautified with an abundance of choice flowers—roses and tulips. Two hundred members and friends were present. After supper Peter Boice and Harry Tremper were elected trustees to succeed themselves and the roll of the church was called. A number who were not able to be present responded by letter. A beautiful violin solo was rendered by Jerome Williams with Miss Pearl Rightmeyer at the piano.

Two addresses full of wit and wisdom and fitting the spirit of the occasion were given by the Rev. G. R. Ingersoll of Rhinebeck and the Rev. F. B. Seelye of the Fair Street Reformed Church.

During the evening a quartet, Prof. C. E. Longyear, Mr. Shurtler, Miss Ada Fuller and Miss Mary Dunbar, sang a selection which was greatly enjoyed. The Rev. Mr. Ingersoll sang two greatly appreciated selections and altogether the evening was one of those occasions that help so much to deepen and unify the life of a church.

searches. The plaintiff procured what it was paying for and what it agreed to pay for, and was not concerned with the question of whether the physical labor of inspecting the records was performed by the defendants personally or by clerks in their office or by others employed by them.

Further it is urged that unnecessary searching was done. It has been testified to by both Liaison and Fowler that Mr. Dykeman stated that the searches were to go back as far as the records went. This is denied by Mr. Ellison. Mr. Dykeman was not called as a witness by either party. It may be that some particular kinds of instruments were searched for at a period when such instrument could not have existed. However that may be the usual and customary method of searching in Ulster county seems to have been followed. To predicate fraud on this circumstance is to impute dishonorable knowledge to a dozen reputable lawyers of Ulster county who made these searches for the defendants and who were of course cognizant of the facts. As one of these lawyers, and a former deputy county clerk, Mr. Brooks, said: "You search in every conceivable way that you know how in order to see if there is anything that affects the title. That is what I have been taught to do." It should be remembered also that the statutory fees of the county clerk were not the criterion for the defendants' charges except as they were made so by contract or by the consent of the corporation counsel. Any other amount consented to was equally proper. Hence the case of Matter of Snyder, 12 App. Div. 139, has no application.

These searches were made in triplicate and together with abstracts of the title were sent to the plaintiff from time to time in connection with the bills presented therefor. They were subjects to scrutiny not only of the law department of the plaintiff but also of its board of water supply and of its comptroller. The facilities were at the disposal of each of these various departments of the plaintiff to ascertain in minutest detail the propriety or impropriety of the charges. The years through which the searches extended appeared on the face of the searches themselves. The correspondence in evidence as well as the oral testimony shows conclusively that these bills included charges and disbursements received close inspection not perfunctorily but critically at different times in the three different departments of the plaintiff. In some instances they were gone into with extreme minuteness. The method of computation was carefully explained in the comptroller's office showing the years over which the searches extended and the particular instruments searched for in each year. In other words the identical matters which are now criticized were then criticized and finally accepted by the representative of the plaintiff. Mr. Harcourt testified: "I told him (the representative of the comptroller) that was the only way that you could do the work and be sure that your searches were right." The attention of the defendants was called to various items of their charges and they from time to time were required to make explanations thereof. It is conceivable that in the numerous transactions involving a multiplicity of details, mistakes may have occurred and overpayments may have been made; it is also conceivable that overcharges may have been made on a mistaken notion by the defendants as to the proper basis for such charges; but it is scarcely conceivable that with such a system of inspection and scrutiny as existed in the various departments of the plaintiff to the knowledge of the defendants and with a strong probability of detection men of intelligence would have engaged in such a scheme of wrong doing as is alleged herein. The question here is not whether the bills were correct or whether overpayments may have been made, but whether the defendants procured the same to be made through fraud and conspiracy. These charges have failed.

Having reached the above conclusion it becomes unnecessary to consider some of the propositions involved in the proposed findings which have been submitted to me. The only material inquiry under the complaint is as to the fraud or good faith of the defendants and the plaintiff having failed to establish fraud must fail in the action. Other questions involved in the proposed findings are immaterial. I do not wish to imply, however, that there may or may not have been by mistake or misconception overpayments to the defendants. Those questions being immaterial to the present action I have not considered them because to do so would serve no useful purpose.

The complaint should be dismissed with costs to each of the defendants. The case has been unusual and difficult and I think it proper that there should be an additional allowance of $500 to each defendant.

KERLEY'S 33 STRAND

Candid Misgivings.
"When I go home at night," said the querulous man, "my wife always seems glad to see me."
"Is there anything surprising about that?"
"I don't know how to look at the matter. When I look into the glass I can't help feeling that anybody who is glad to see me must have mighty little artistic sense."—Washington Star.

Humiliating.
"Your wife looks rather put out to-day. What is the matter?"
"She was at the rummage sale yesterday and became so interested she took off her new hat and laid it on the counter. By mistake one of the clerks picked it up and sold it for 35 cents, which was all he could get for it."—Exchange.

What Gifts to Accept.
Among the many questions where the usages of social life we call etiquette are called upon to define lines either strictly or only with slight restrictions the one concerning the acceptance of expensive gifts from men friends to girls and women friends is often discussed.

It has come about in some way that to accept things that are very costly shows lack of personal pride. A woman who does is apt to find herself placed under obligations. This is something no delicate minded woman is willing to do. She does not like the idea that a man has been given cause to think himself entitled to more consideration on account of handsome gifts made to her. So she very properly returns any such that may strike her sense of propriety as of too great value, as far as price is concerned, for her to use in any way.

But unfortunately there are many girls and maturer women who gayly declare they will "take anything" they can get from men friends and acquaintances. The argument is very feminine: "He will spend that money on somebody. Why not on me?" is the way they put it. But when pay day comes and such women find that it is presumed they feel obliged or are under obligations to the giver they repudiate and still, strange to say, they keep the gifts, no matter what they are.

This is a very serious breach in the laws of social usage. Etiquette strictly demands, first, that such gifts should not be received at all, and if for some reason it appears better to accept than to "make a fuss about it" they should be returned as soon as possible, with the most friendly assurance that a simpler expression of good will will be far more acceptable and still more appreciated.

A man is justified in presenting a hostess who has been delightfully hospitable with something very handsome for her house, never for her personal wearing. But the accepted and correct gifts from men who know to their women friends are flowers, books, music or bonbons. These may be in fancy jeweled holders, but even that is not in perfect taste.

Good Manners at Home.
Take your good manners home with you. You cannot afford to be negligent of or rude to the people with whom you live every day. Unfailing courtesy in the family circle is the best possible investment to secure peace and harmony.
Etiquette differs in its outward manifestations in different countries and among people of different walks of life. In Europe the stranger makes the first call. In England and this country the resident makes the first call. In Europe the man lifts his hat to the woman before she bows to him. In this country and in England the woman bows first. The habit of using the knife as we use the fork is not utterly unknown among foreigners, while with us it is considered bad form. But it was not always so regarded here. You still see in out of the way places the old fashioned knife with the curiously enlarged and rounded end, so made to facilitate the eating of peas.
Some continental do not consider it out of the way to use toothpicks at the table. They sometimes have chic little jeweled weapons to use in this way. Even a diamond trimmed toothpick would hardly make the custom acceptable in this country. But then some of our customs and manners probably shock foreigners quite as much.
But, though it has many different rules and forms, the underlying motive of etiquette is pretty much the same everywhere. Its effort is to embellish, dignify and make attractive human social intercourse; also to simplify it and make it easy without removing those restrictions which make the difference between civilization and savagery. Therefore do not put too much weight on the small signs of etiquette, but never let go the large ideal of it.

Use of Cards.
If a double card is used with Mr. and Mrs. engraved on it when calling on a married woman leave just one. In making a first call on a married couple, however, the wife leaves her own card and two of her husband's, keeping the combination card for use in subsequent calls. An engagement announcement should be acknowledged. Send a card with or without a polite acknowledgment and greeting in a few words, such as "Congratulations and good wishes." In making an evening call a man waits until the maid tells him he will be received, when he removes his hat, coat and gloves in the hall before being ushered into the reception room.

For a Simple Wedding.
If the bride wears a street costume she should also wear a hat and coat to complete it. Some fashionable and smart brides dress this way for their weddings, especially if either the bride or bridegroom has been married before or if neither is in the first youth. As to colors, light gray or tan is preferable to darker colors for a wedding suit. No attendant is customary at such a wedding, which is supposed to be a quiet, simple affair.

Future Assured.
"What makes you think America has a great musical future?"
"The police we can make at an election or a ball game shows that we have great voices. All they need is cultivation."—Washington Star.

FORSYTH & DAVIS, Kingston, N. Y.

SUBURBAN JITNEY BUSSES MAY BE RUN

Many Surrounding Villages and Hamlets Would Welcome a Service That Would Give Them Cheap Access to the City.

A jitney bus line for suburban traffic meets with the approval of a number of Kingston business men who have been approached on the subject. No definite plan has been proposed and there is nothing definite whatever in the project, but the success of the jitney busses in town has led them to believe that such a line, if properly equipped and managed, would provide the facilities for the suburban population which the railroads cannot furnish and for parts of the county which the railroads do not reach.

One fact on which everyone agrees is that the line, if established, should be under capable management which would be in sympathy with the public, and would be willing to provide such service as would tend to invite travel on the jitney bus.

Discussing the project, one man who has given considerable thought to the plan, pointed out today that there is a large population along the Rosendale road which is not served by the Walkkill Valley Railroad. As far as Rosendale there is a growing population which it is believed would welcome jitney bus service. Beyond Rosendale and as far as New Paltz are people who would patronize such a line and in view of the present train service on the Walkkill Valley railroad, would welcome a bus line that would afford quick and accommodating service at a reasonable price.

Between Kingston and Saugerties there is also an excellent opportunity, it is believed, and a jitney bus line operating between these two points would accommodate people who at present are not served either by the West Shore railroad or the Glasco yacht.

Port Ewen, Ulster Park, Esopus, West Park and Highland also could be brought to Kingston's doors with great ease by a jitney bus line and afford service which the West Shore railroad cannot give, and all places between Kingston and Ellenville could be served similarly. Between Kingston and Woodstock there is a rapid growth in population which would undoubtedly make use of such a line, and along all the roads radiating from Kingston there are people who do not come to Kingston often because the nearest railroad station is too far away and no other means of cheap and satisfactory transportation now exist. With the building of the Sloatsburg bridge and jitney bus service, there would be a big growth in the town of Esopus near Kingston, and a corresponding increase in the value of real estate.

The suburban jitney bus service, to be successful, would require careful planning before being put into operation, as otherwise some sections might be neglected while in other sections competition might become too keen to render it an unprofitable undertaking. To avoid disaster, therefore, the movement, if undertaken, should be carefully considered and the growth should be gradual, in order to accord with the demands of the public. To this end, it has been suggested that various people who contemplate engaging in the business meet in order to discuss the matter, and of course that the business should not be undertaken by one individual.

Talk of establishing jitney bus lines along several of the roads leading to Kingston has been general for several days, and out of town men who have been considering the matter have consulted with Kingston friends in regard to the matter.

An inquiry among merchants today by a Freeman reporter disclosed the fact that out of town parties have discussed with them also the practicability of the plan, but up to the present time nothing definite has been proposed.

Among the merchants who spoke favorably of the project today were Sam Bernstein, Elbert F. MacFadden, president of the L. B. Van Wageningen Company, and Vincent A. Gorman, vice president of the Herbert Carl Dry Goods Company, all of whom expressed the belief that the jitney bus for suburban service was a business proposition which would justify the most careful consideration. They believe that such bus lines will be established in time and when established will operate strongly for the development of Kingston as well as the suburban sections and result in increased business in all parts of the county.

PINE GROVE.

Pine Grove, April 15.—Mrs. D. Myer Snyder and Miss Julia Snyder were Thursday visitors of Mrs. George Burton at West Saugerties.

Henry C. Burton, wife and daughter, Viola, spent the week end with relatives at Clum Hill and Platte Clove.

Ernest Mower and wife have broken ground for a bungalow at the corner of the West Saugerties and Woodstock road, near Werner's Hotel.

Mrs. George Theln is visiting her mother-in-law, Mrs. M. Theln, at Centerville.

Mrs. Ed. Burton and son, William, spent the week end with friends on the mountain.

While coming down Franklin Snyder's hill one day last week an automobile overturned and "spilled" its occupants in the mud. Fortunately no one was hurt, but the car was slightly damaged.

Peter Mower and "Teddy" Bovee have traded horses.

Mrs. Edw. Bishop spent a day last week with her mother, Mrs. Eleanor Mower, at Centerville.

Three of our Pine Grove men and one of Woodstock have given up the tobacco habit. Two of the men bet the other a box of cigars that they would not smoke within the calendar year. The other two made a bet of $5 hats and boxes of cigars are not picked up along the street in these days of no work and high cost of living.

Charles Bishop, wife and son, Walter, made a trip to Zena on Sunday.

CHRISTINE WHEELER

NEW DANCES AND "ISMS" CRAZED RECTOR, SAYS HIS DESERTED WIFE.

New York, April 16.—Mrs. Christine Wheeler, wife of the Rev. Francis Rolt Wheeler, Episcopal clergyman, author, lecturer, poet and former chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, has asked the court of domestic relations to force him to pay $7 a week toward the support of herself and two children, who she says he deserted for another woman, with whom she asserts he is living in luxurious quarters.

"New dances and free love literature crazed my husband," said the wife, who bears him no animosity. "Even now my heart goes out in pity for him for the hours and days in which he must pay. Then, I, the woman who should be at his side to comfort him in his time of trial will be out of his reach forever."

Enough for All.

A minister declares that each individual makes hell for himself. Some husbands, however, considerably make enough for their wives and children also.—Kansas City Journal.

The Biltmore depicts the much sought after quiet business suit, giving a man the self-assurance that comes from being well dressed, together with the sense of comfort in his clothes.

The fact that we are offering such models as the Biltmore goes far in explaining why the Live Store is winning an increasing measure of patronage among substantial citizens—and is largely due to this influence that ours is the fastest growing clothing business in this community.

OVER-PRODUCTION BRINGS TO YOU MONUMENTS AT REDUCED PRICES

Every dollar you send out of town, patronizing mail order concerns or agents representing firms outside of Kingston, flies away with a VALUE that rightfully belongs to YOUR community. The same rule applies to the purchase of gravestones or monuments, and here's an opportunity to invest in those articles at unusual savings, at the same time spending your money with a well-known home industry.

As is generally known throughout the city, Matthew M. Byrne, senior member of the firm of Byrne Brothers, died recently. In his lifetime the firm's monument works at the corner of Broadway and Henry street, was run on regular time, with a full complement of expert stone men, and owing to the continued dull times, the products of the works accumulated faster than has been the demand. Of course this condition could not have been foreseen, but there's a remedy. In order to quickly and satisfactorily settle the affairs of the late Matthew M. Byrne's estate and at the same time reduce our over-production of monuments, etc., we have

DEEPLY CUT PRICES ON ALL STONES NOW ON HAND

Besides the reasons given for the radical price-reductions referred to, we might add the fact that our yard premises are congested with surplus stones, and that we must have room to continue our work.

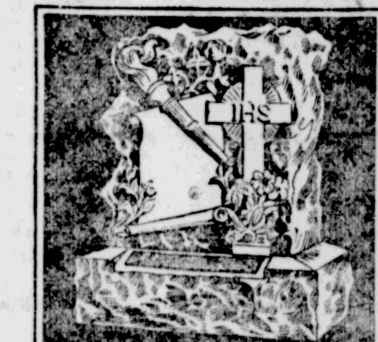

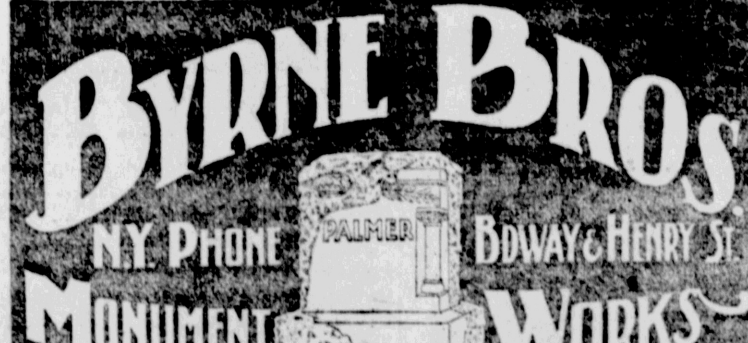

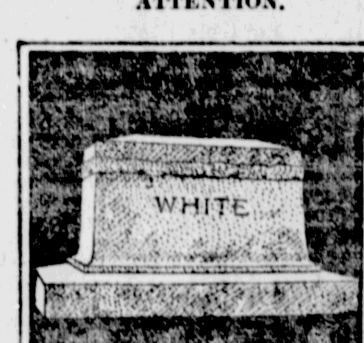

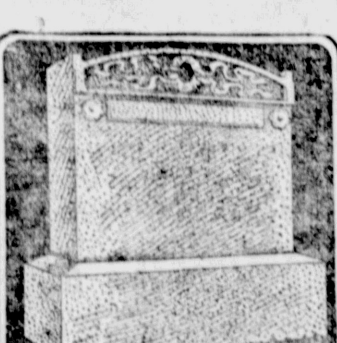

Here, then, is an opportunity to secure a fine monument at a price never before paralleled in Kingston. The chance will be yours for a short time only and you will be wise to embrace it at once.

Coming as it does at a time when owners are beautifying burial plots and assisting Nature to look her best for Memorial Day, this price-lowering event on artistically designed monuments will be doubly welcome to those who have had in mind the purchase of a gravestone this spring. Certainly more beautiful monuments cannot be found anywhere along the Hudson River or in the State of New York. Every stone is perfect, and you may purchase here with full reliance on the integrity and discernment of this firm.

Plot owners and others who may wish to secure a stone of some description to mark the resting place of a departed relative or friend, are earnestly requested to call, inspect the monuments on hand and learn of price-concessions that will be decidedly to their advantage.

SAUGERTIES.

Saugerties, April 16.—Burnett Levine, who runs the bankrupt clothing store on Main street, was arrested by Officer Kistner yesterday afternoon on a charge of assault and battery committed on Jacob Swartz. Levine was arraigned in justice court before Magistrate Chidester. He denied having kicked Swartz. Several witnesses were sworn and testified in favor of Swartz. Judge Chidester imposed a fine of $10, which Levine paid and was discharged. After Levine was discharged he had a warrant issued for Swartz's arrest on the charge of attempted assault and calling him abusive names. The evidence showed that Swartz had called Levine a crook and a thief. After considerable arguing Judge Chidester fined Swartz $2. Ex-Judge Rowe represented Levine in both cases.

The Saugerties farm, James O. Winston, owner, has shipped Miss Sub Rosa (3), 2:15 3/4, Lulu Worthy, 2:11 3/4, to Thomas W. Murphy at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to be bred to Peter Volo (3), 2:03 3/4, world's champion three year old trotter.

Harvey Sammons of Kingston was in town Wednesday. Howard Finger of Jane street has been awarded the contract to paint the buildings at the Saugerties farm. Charles Kaplan of Troy was in town Thursday.

Letter Carrier Clifford Abeel was bitten in the leg by a dog owned by James Barber Thursday morning. Dr. DeWitt cauterized the wound.

The case of Fred T. Russell against Burnett Levine will be tried before a jury in the court room tomorrow morning.

John Sullivan, gate-tender at the Ulster avenue crossing of the West Shore railroad, has resigned his position.

Dr. James Krom and wife, F. G. Phelps and wife, H. T. Keeney and wife and Mrs. D. G. Gale attended the May Irwin show at Kingston on Wednesday evening.

"The Girl and the Pennant," an operetta, will be given in Saugerties Friday, April 23, under the direction of Mrs. Josephine Richardson Whitaker, well known in this locality as a contralto of superior talent. There are over 100 assisting. The operetta is bright, laughable, comic, full of pretty tunes, amusing situations, well set up young men, bright girls in smart frocks, a dance here and there and a spirit of "go" which all in all makes it exceptionally attractive.

Miss Anne Phelps takes the leading lady part; Hoyt Overbaugh, the leading gentleman's part. There are forty little people being trained by Miss Gladys Van Steenburg. A double sextet, under the direction of Mrs. Whitaker and Ronwick Smedburg. Taken altogether it promises an evening of unusual enjoyment. Reserved seats may be secured by addressing Barret's book store, Saugerties, N. Y.

Through the Looking Glass.

If you listen to two men discussing eastern races—the Chinese in particular—you will invariably hear them remark with that weighty tone of finality in which people are wont to deliver their obiter dicta: "The Chinaman is an enigma, an insoluble mystery; behind his impenetrable mask there lurks we know not what curious variant of the human race." But does it ever occur to us that in the "barbarian" or "foreign devil" the Chinaman finds a problem of even greater perplexity?

The fact that all our books begin at the wrong end and that our lines are printed horizontally instead of vertically is to him overwhelming evidence of the topsy turvyness of our minds; that we shake a woman by the hand is, in his eyes, most unseemly, while our dancing, with its lack of dignity and stately grace, suggests to him nothing less than a war dance of savages. The practice of walking with a stick shows us to be in very sooth a most ferocious and uncivilized people, for who would carry a stick save for the purpose of beating innocent folks?—Baltimore Sun.

Finding His Bride.

In one part of the canton of Ticino, in Switzerland, a very quaint marriage ceremony prevails. The bridegroom dresses in his "Sunday best" and, accompanied by as many friends and relatives as he can muster for the fete, goes to claim his bride. Finding the door locked, he demands admittance. The inmates ask him his business, and in reply he solicits the hand of his chosen maiden. If his answer be deemed satisfactory he is successively introduced to a number of matrons and maids, some perhaps deformed and others old and ugly. Then he is presented to some large dolls, all of which he rejects with scorn, amid general merriment. The bewildered bridegroom, whose impetuosity and temper are now sorely tried, is then informed that his ladylove is absent and is invited in to see for himself. He rushes into the house and searches from room to room until he finds her in her bridal dress ready to go to church. Then are his troubles over and his state as a benedict assured.

How a Zeppelin is Made.

The building of a Zeppelin is not the work of a day. The mere work on the vessel takes an entire year, and when that work is done another three months must be spent in testing. Stretched on a framework of girders there are from seventeen to twenty-five balloons, from end to end. Over these and over the girders is an outer skin of proofed canvas. Slung under the great length is a series of cabins.

Right in front is the station of the lookout man, who is in charge of the starting and the landing. He has anchors slung beneath him. In the first boat, which is entirely covered in, are two petrol engines. Behind this boat is the gangway, fitted up with sleeping berths for the crew. In the center is the observation station. It is from here that the bombs are dropped, and it is in here that the marvelous steering and sighting apparatus is installed, as well as the wireless plant.—St. Louis Republic.

SENATOR BEVERIDGE AND DR. SUDEKUM PHOTOGRAPHED AT TETLOW, GERMANY.

New York, April 16.—Former Senator Albert J. Beveridge, who was on both the German and French battlefronts in Europe, in a speech here asserted the war is not a conflict brought on by rulers and against the will of the people. "It is a war of peoples," he said. "I tried everywhere to find a Socialist who was averse to carrying on the war but they were all for it, emphatically. They are making wonderful strides in democracy in the war ridden countries of Europe, and as a result it seems as though they must outstrip the United States." The photo shows the senator and Dr. Sudekum at Tetlow, Germany.

CAR OF THE AMERICAN FAMILY

Ask the Engineer

We hope you have in your acquaintance a competent engineer. We would like you to get his opinion of the Hupmobile.

Engineers constitute a little world of and unto themselves. They are keen critics, but generous ones, when they encounter good work. And these sharpest of observers say the Hupmobile is good.

In Detroit—where there are many automobile engineers—one hears the highest praise of the Hupmobile.

It would be too much to say that there is not a dissenting voice regarding the Hupmobile among Detroit engineers.

But it would be hard to find one who holds an unfavorable view.

By common consent they have settled on the Hupmobile as one car they can unite in commending.

Now this is not mere sentiment or friendliness. Reputable engineers will not barter away their professional standing by unmerited praise.

When they approve of the Hupmobile—and especially of its splendid small bore, long stroke motor—that approval means something.

It is an endorsement founded on extraordinary experience and knowledge.

It is a source of pride to us—and a recommendation you can not afford to overlook. Take the engineer's expert opinion along with all the other good things that you hear about the Hupmobile. Let us prove the Hupmobile in a quality test.

Rubber Plates

There are several kinds of artificial teeth. Platinum with porcelain gums for $175, gold plates for $50, aluminum plates for $25 and rubber plates for $10 and $15. They are all worth the money.

Rubber has always been used for the cheaper grades of plate work. We use a pure Para Rubber for our $15 plates, that vulcanizes almost as hard as metal. For these plates we use the best porcelain teeth and platinum pins.

For the $10 plates we use a good grade of red rubber and 20th Century or similar teeth. This is the cheapest good plate made.

Our rubber plates are light, perfect fitting and well selected. We carry thousands of teeth to select from.

Other plates: Platinum with porcelain continuous gums, $175; gold with vulcanite attachments, $50; aluminum, $25. Open evenings to 9. Sundays 9 to 1.

The superb Boston English Opera Chorus and Augmented Orchestra under direction of Basil Horsfall.

"The most artistic performance of 'Il Trovatore' ever taken on tour," is the verdict of Press and Public.

The Boston English Opera Company is as different from the average opera company as a New York production is from a repertoire company.

They do only the one opera "IL TROVATORE," and every energy has been directed to make that one opera a real production.

The cast headed by Joseph F. Sheehan, one of the world's greatest "Manicors," has been especially selected for this one opera. The production also was built for "IL TROVATORE" only and is complete in every detail.

The prices are exceedingly reasonable for such an organization and criticisms from other cities unite in proclaiming it the most artistic and complete production of "IL TROVATORE" ever taken on tour.

The Story of Captain Graham

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure
Newspaper Syndicate.

We had called at Mauritius on our way from Liverpool to Bombay in the ship Farewell and were five days out from the island when the adventure occurred by which we lost the captain and laid the foundation for this story. He was swept overboard in the course of a heavy storm.

Almost before he realized his position the ship was a mile away, and he felt sure that no boat would be lowered to make a search for him. Having found a spar and lashed himself to it, he drifted away to the west and evening came on. Night passed and another day came, and toward the close of that day Captain Graham lost consciousness. He may have drifted a day after that—perhaps two days. When he came to his senses again he was lying on a sandy beach with his feet in the water. He had been cast ashore on an island.

Along the beach were oysters and shellfish aplenty. What struck him curiously was the entire absence of life on the island. He had been on the island a week or so and had twice walked clear around it, when one day, as he was gathering fruit in an open spot, he was suddenly and fiercely attacked by a naked man. The surprise was great, and the captain had not yet recovered his strength; but, shaking the man off, he seized a club and laid about him so vigorously that his assailant ran away.

In breaking away from the captain he ran for the beach. The latter followed at his heels, shouting for him to stop, but the unknown ran to the water, plunged in and swam straight out to sea, looking back now and then and seeming to be in a terrible fright. He held to his course until he could no longer be seen, and there was no doubt he went to his death, as he did not return. In a dense thicket the captain found a rude shelter which the man had used, and among the dried grass forming his bed were a few fragments of cloth, which had once been a pea packet. There were also a sailor's pipe and an empty tobacco box.

The center of the island was considerably higher than elsewhere, and exactly in the middle was a single tree, surrounded by a thicket, which the captain had never yet penetrated. In carrying out his explorations he entered this copse, finding a hard beaten path, evidently made by the crazy man. Piled up at the roots of the tree the captain found a great stock of small iron bound boxes, and it needed but one glance to satisfy him that they were treasure boxes. There was the cavity where they had once been buried, and the boxes were weather beaten, as if long exposed. Two or three large shells lay about, which had doubtless been used to dig out the dirt, and one of the boxes had been opened.

The captain shouldered this box and carried it down to the spot he called "home" and there inspected its contents. It contained about $6,000 in gold. In the pile at the foot of the tree were fifteen other boxes of the same size.

Well, there was a big fortune there, and it belonged to the finder, but it might have been so much sand for all the good it could do him. Days and weeks and months passed away, and one day the castaway counted up the pebbles he had laid in rows along the beach to mark the time and found he had been eleven months on the island. On that day there came a furious gale, and from some wreck at sea the waves brought in a vast quantity of stuff. There was nothing to eat or wear among the wreckage, but there were planks and spars and a carpenter's tool chest, and as soon as the storm had abated the castaway went to work to build him a raft. He had determined to leave the island at any hazard, and after four or five days' work he had his raft completed. It was a rude but stout affair. Wild fruits were taken for provisions, and fresh water was carried in a wine keg which had come ashore with the wreckage. From one of the boxes the captain took $500 in gold pieces, and one morning when the wind was from the west he launched his raft and drifted off before it. By his reckoning, which was probably correct, it was seven days before he was picked up by the John J. Speed, an American merchant vessel, homeward bound.

Captain Graham at once set about finding a ship to bring the treasure off. A brig was finally chartered and sailed with him aboard, but after a cruise of months she failed to find the island.

In the space of two years he made three different voyages in search of the island, and when the story leaked out three or four other expeditions were fitted out, but in all the sailing to and fro no human eye could find the looked for spot. If it had been raised from the sea by a volcanic disturbance, had a second disturbance caused the sea to swallow it up? There are many reasons to believe that this was the fate which overtook it. About ten years after the captain's last voyage a volcanic island, which was simply a barren rock about a mile in circumference, was pushed above water where his island was supposed to be, and it is there today with a fringe of trees all around the outer edge. It has been searched inch by inch for treasure, but not a single gold piece has it yielded up.

DREAMS THAT COME TRUE.

And Those That Don't and the Workings of the Sleep Mind.

Of course, some dreams come true. The most hardheaded business man will have to admit it. But the proportion of them? That's where people differ.

Few people, if any, sleep without dreaming, and even on the basis of only one dream a night this would mean over seventeen thousand dreams for each person fifty years old. Yet few of us can recall even seventeen occasions in which a coming event has been forecasted in a dream. The prophecy that comes true is remembered because the actual occurrence brings to memory the concepts in the dream, the others are forgotten.

Since our dreams are woven from the fabric of our lives, and our lives, after all, run along in fairly narrow grooves, it would be astounding if some of them did not juggle our impressions in such wise as to seem to forecast something new. The mathematical doctrine of chances alone suffices to justify the dreams that strike right. After all one in a thousand isn't so many.

The dreams that give right answers to problems, too, are evidences not only of prophecy, but also of the existence of a sleep mind which works differently from the waking mind.

The sleep mind, which works by intuition, gains, as well as loses, by its freedom from the shackles of logic and reason. Conclusions based on reason are often utterly unsound, because we do not know all the reasons, whereas an intuitive conclusion, which is the outcome of emotion, may be inherently right.

Wherefore when a serious question awaits decision it is not a sign of indeterminateness, but an evidence of wisdom, to say, "I want to sleep on that."

Quite unconsciously we do this sometimes, believing the answer to be merely a rise to gain time. Truly our intent is to take a change of venue, to have the point settled by the sleep mind, which is free from the shackles of prejudice and custom.—New York American.

SHE WAS A TRUE WIFE.

The Story of a Crisis and the Way It Was Happily Handled.

A woman has just told us of what she did the night her young husband found himself bankrupt. His factory was closed, he had lost all he owned—plus a good deal more—and, as he looked at it, life was about at an end. He reflected that he had taken his wife from a happy and charming home and that he had brought disgrace and poverty on her. It occurred to him that a well placed bullet might be the best all round solution of his difficulties.

His wife, at home, made a poignant surmise as to what he was thinking. Suddenly it occurred to her that there was a chance for team work—an opportunity to show what being a wife really meant. She prepared a delicious little dinner, she made her home as inviting as she could, and she arrayed herself in her most becoming dress.

Her husband returned, not to a disheveled and sobbing woman, to a neglected house and a drama of disaster, but to a home where everything spoke of resolution, of continuity, of expectation. The fire on his hearth, his simple, well cooked dinner, the encouraging eyes of his attractive wife, restored him to a true sense of values. He was able, amid all his confusion of purpose and torment of realization, to see his failure as only a retrievable episode in his life.

He is now a successful manufacturer, his debts are paid and he has a happy home with a son and a daughter in it. He was saved from being a suicide by the fact that a woman was sportsmanlike at the right moment.—Collier's Weekly.

Verhaeren a Ruthless Book Enthusiast.

Emile Verhaeren, the great Belgian writer, used to be noted in days gone by for his ruthless behavior toward books. Friends grew chary of lending him works of any value, for when struck by a particularly fine passage he had a habit of shouting, "How splendid!" and flinging the volume which aroused his enthusiasm across the room or up to the ceiling—often with dire results. Another trait which served to make M. Verhaeren conspicuous as a youthful barrister was his love of gorgeous raiment. This induced a Spanish friend to present him with a golden waistcoat, cut out of a pair of curtains he had brought from San Sebastian.—London Graphic.

Suggests His Use.

"Why does Ed call that old nag he takes his girl out riding behind Automobile?"

"I suppose he looks on the old nag as a sparking plug."—Baltimore American.

Pharmacists Under Restraint.

In a land such as Cuba, where names such as "Star," "Lion of Gold," etc., are so widely used by storekeepers and held dear by them, it seems strange that there should be one class of merchants who are discriminated against. Yet it is a fact that the pharmacist is prohibited from using such fancy names to designate his pharmacy. This discovery was made in the case of a druggist in Havana who was fined for having a name over his store. It seems that according to law and regulation a pharmacy in Cuba can have only the name of the owner over the door or on the window and may not use any other distinctive name.—Spokane Spokesman Review.

Giving Pa Away.

Ma: So pa took advantage of my absence and searched the bureau where I keep my diary? Ostend: Yes, ma, and pa said that was what he called a "bureau of information."—Chicago Tribune.

The Absolute Zero.

The absolute zero of temperature, absence of all heat energy, is 461 degrees below the zero of Fahrenheit. Liquid helium is 454 below, liquid air 310, and liquid hydrogen 418. These degrees of cold are beyond comprehension. And many new properties of matter have been discovered by subjecting various phases—elements—to these low temperatures. Thus, it is a theory that chemically pure metals would allow all of a current of electricity to pass without resistance—that is, the more nearly the absolute purity and absolute cold are reached the less the observed and measured resistance to flow of electricity.—New York American.

That Was Different.

"Why don't you get an automobile?" "Because I don't know whether or not I could manage one." "You didn't let that consideration stop you when you wanted a wife."—Boston Transcript.

How He Accounted For It.

A man who was presented for naturalization said he had six children, all born in this country, that the oldest was sixteen and that he had lived in this country nine years. This led to a little cross questioning on the part of the examiner, who could not understand the arithmetic mind of a man who declared that he had been here but nine years, but his oldest child, sixteen, was born here.

"How do you account for it?" finally asked the examiner, willing to give the man a chance to get out of his apparent mistake.

"Why," declared the would be citizen, "I married a widow with four children."—Boston Record.

Amplified Designation.

"Bliggins prides himself on calling a spade a spade." "Yes, but he puts in a few adjectives when he gets out in the garden and tries to manage one."—Washington Star.

CITADEL OF GUISE NOW UNDER GERMAN OCCUPATION.

It is expected that Guise will figure prominently in operations in the war zone this spring and summer. It is a formidable fortress and since the Kaiser's troops have occupied it they have made it as impregnable as any fort can be against modern field artillery. Guise is situated northeast of St. Quentin and is an important railroad center. Because it commands several lines running back toward their base, as well as other lines running into France, it is essential that Germany hold the town. After the St. Mihiel operations are concluded, it is believed that France will launch a drive against Guise.

Scientific Farming

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE.

Aid Given by Farmers in Fighting This Widespread Trouble.

(Prepared by the United States department of agriculture.)

The recent lifting of the foot and mouth quarantines from large areas previously closed and the modification of the quarantines in still other sections has been made possible by the co-operation not only of the various state officials, but of farmers and stockmen themselves. Where this co-operation has been most in evidence progress in the eradication of the disease has been most rapid. The federal authorities have of course control over the movement of live stock in interstate commerce only. The local quarantines are established and enforced by the state. Their efficiency depends in great measure upon the willingness of the people to submit to the necessary restrictions.

Indiana and Michigan are cited as instances of the importance in this respect of public opinion. In Michigan the first herd was slaughtered on Oct. 19. Cases of the disease existed in fifteen Michigan counties and in eighteen in Indiana. In all 330 herds were affected. Sixty days later these herds had all been slaughtered and the infected premises cleaned and freed from disease. In the interval there had been only a few scattering instances—half a dozen possibly—of the plague spreading from these different centers of infection to neighboring farms.

BARN PREPARED FOR FUMIGATION.

The people not only observed the quarantine regulations, but they did all in their power to expedite the work of slaughter. In many cases they had the ditches in which the animals were to be buried dug and waiting for the killing gangs. As a rule, no objection was taken to the appraiser's valuation of the condemned stock, which is the more surprising in view of the fact that so little was generally known of the seriousness of the disease. The farmers did not want to part with their stock. They saw that the sore mouths and feet grew better, and they had had no experience with the after effects of the pestilence—the constant aborting, the failure to produce milk, the ability to disseminate disease months after the visible symptoms had disappeared. Nevertheless they accepted the situation, helping instead of hindering.

In only a very few cases was there any attempt to conceal the existence of the disease—in fact, public opinion was so strongly against this that it was practically impossible to do so. In one instance a man fed some skim milk from a creamery to a calf, which later developed foot and mouth disease. It occurred to him to kill the calf and say nothing about the matter. The neighbors, however, obtained some inkling of the facts and notified the authorities. After he had been forced to admit that he had killed the calf the body was dug up and unmistakable marks of the disease found upon it. Within two weeks all the rest of the herd was infected and had to be killed. In addition, the owner was fined $20 or so for breaking the quarantine regulations. The sentiment of the whole community, it should be noted, was against him.

From such experiences live stock authorities are more than ever convinced that skim milk should invariably be sterilized. The danger from the foot and mouth disease is, of course, a passing one. Previous epidemics have been stamped out, and there is no reason to suppose that this one will not be. Tuberculosis, however, is a permanent menace. Its symptoms are not so immediately noticeable, and it is therefore more difficult to trace the origin of the infection, but there is no doubt that it is frequently disseminated in skim milk in the same way that the foot and mouth disease was in the instances described.

Together with the creameries, public sales of live stock have proved themselves most dangerous agents in spreading foot and mouth disease. In Indiana and Michigan the state authorities absolutely prohibited the holding of such sales in or adjacent to areas where the disease existed. The spread of the contagion in other states where this prohibition was not enforced shows the value of the precaution, but it requires strong and determined action on the part of the local authorities.

Real Public Spirit.

"Is old Millhouse usually regarded as a public spirited citizen?"

"Oh, decidedly. Why, I have known that man to lend a big tract of land to the city on the sole stipulation that the city should drain, grade and otherwise improve it and then hand it back."

Richmond Times-Dispatch.

He Closed the Door.

The tramp knuckled the farmer's door. The farmer responded. "Friend," said the vagabond, "I'd like a job."

The farmer looked him over. "What can you do?" he asked. "I can bore for sap," the farmer shook his head. "No," he said, "with a face like that you wouldn't need to do no boria!" The sap would run as soon as it saw you."

And he closed the door.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

He Would Not Take No.

"I'll not take 'no' for an answer, Miss Bunker—Priscilla," he declared bravely, as he persistently pressed his suit. "Then, sir," replied the cold and cultured Boston girl, rising proudly to the occasion, "will you, in lieu of that much hackneyed negative assertion, accept my positive declaration to respond concurrently to the query propounded?" And he did.

A TALE OF THE SEA.

How a Trip on an Ocean Liner Appeared to a Humorist.

One of the stories that Marshall P. Wilder, the humorist, used to tell was about an experience he had on an ocean liner, and this is about the way it went:

"You know in rough weather they build a fence round the table to keep the dishes down. I was just pursuing a piece of bread when the ship did a figure 8 and the lady opposite me got my bread, and I got her fish. For the rest of the meal we fed each other."

"I was getting them over the plate with an inshoot when she stole home on a wild pitch."

"The day I was feeling the worst the passengers asked me to get up a concert. I had got up everything else, so I said I would try."

"We had a prima donna on board who was having her voice cultivated in Paris."

"I guess she was going over to get it. I know she didn't have it with her. She told me she had a wonderful voice, but people don't mind what they say on shipboard."

"The night of the concert was rough, and she chose a fitting selection. 'Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep.' She was well started when the ship gave a sudden halt and threw her under the table. I was accompanying her on the piano and so had to follow her—and the piano followed me."

"'Beg pardon,' I said, 'but is this a concert, or a knockabout act?' She thought she was down for a solo, but she was down for an hour and ten minutes."

Friendships.

Make not thy friends too cheap to thee nor thyself to thy friends.—Fuller.

Couldn't Get Square.

A Scotsman while on a visit to some friends in England was persuaded to have a hand at cards, with the result that when he rose to go he was the poorer by about 30 shillings.

"Stay a little longer," said his friend. "Supper is ready, and we have a nice piece of ham cooked."

"I want none of yer ham," said the angry Scot. "Dae ye think I cud eat 30 shillings' worth of ham?"

Made It Worse.

A philanthropic lady visited an asylum not long ago and displayed great interest in the inmates. One old man particularly gained her compassion. "And how long have you been here,

"DO THEY TREAT YOU WELL?"

my man?" she inquired. "Twelve years," was the answer. "Do they treat you well?" "Yes." After addressing a few more questions to him the visitor passed on. She noticed a smile broadening on the face of her attendant and, on asking the cause, heard with consternation that the old man was none other than the medical superintendent. She hurried back to make apologies. How successful she was may be gathered from these words: "I am sorry, doctor. I will never be governed by appearances again."

His Highest Ambition.

"It has been my custom," said a teacher, "to encourage discussion of subjects outside the lesson papers, and along this line I one day spoke of ambitions. After I had set before the class the desirability of having high aims I asked my pupils what each planned to be. One wanted to be a doctor, another president, another an aviator, another an electric car motor-man, another an engineer on a railroad, and so on around the class until I reached Tommy."

"Tommy is a bright, handsome youngster of seven years, and I was expecting him to want to be some one of great importance in the world. I was puzzled to find him plainly much embarrassed. He didn't want to tell me an ambition, but finally asked if he might whisper it to me. Much interested, I gave him permission, and he nudged up to my desk. Even there he hesitated."

"Come, come, Tommy," I said somewhat impatiently, "tell me what it is you want to be in life."

"He raised himself on tiptoes and stirred one arm about my neck as he whispered, 'Your—your husband!'"—Chicago Herald.

A Cool Suggestion.

MRS. JAMES T. WARBASSE.

MRS. WARBASSE TELLS OF PLANS IN GIVING $6,000.00 BUSINESS TO EMPLOYEES.

New York, April 16.—Mrs. James Warbasse, largest stockholder of the $6,000,000 Dennison Manufacturing Company, who has turned the concern over to the employees to run on a profit sharing basis, says her action was "merely a step in the direction of the inevitable as the time is coming when the one man power business will be no more." She believes the time is imminent when the laborers, the employees will control all corporations for which they now merely work as menials. She is working now on the organization of shop girls to train them so they can demand and get more wages.

GOOD IDEAS FOR CLEANUP CAMPAIGN.

Various localities where clean-up and paintup crusades are waged appoint special committees of women and girls to aid in the work.

Also many schools organize their pupils into bands of dirt annihilators. The young folks are found to be especially effective in this sort of activity. Most of them like to feel that they have become old enough and big enough to assist the grownups in doing the grown-ups' work.

A Proof of It.

STATE CHARITIES AID DOES GOOD WORK

The regular monthly meeting of the State Charities Aid Association, the local branch, was held Thursday evening at the office of the county agent in the county building, corner Crown and John streets. Rear Admiral Higginson, chairman, presided. Miss Ougheltree, the county agent, acted as secretary pro tem, in the absence of Frederick Benedict. As Mr. Benedict has left town for an indefinite period, Roger H. Loughran was elected secretary to fill out Mr. Benedict's unexpired term of office. It was stated that as a result of the sale of tickets for the recent play of San Francisco, given recently at the opera house, the approximate sum of $70 had been realized for the further work of the local State Charities Aid Association, and several persons who had tickets had not yet been heard from.

Miss Ougheltree, county agent for defective and dependent children, then gave, first a statistical report of the past month's work, followed by an informal history of some of her most interesting cases. During the past month three visits were made to boarding homes in the interest of the children in these homes. Several conferences had been held at the office with boarding mothers who had come there to talk over the care of the children with Miss Ougheltree. There had been 158 interviews with friends and relatives, relative to the welfare of children. 57 interviews with officials had taken place, and 12 other interviews of various sorts. One address was given and 56 letters were written.

One of the remarkable cases reported was that of a nine year old boy, who had been sent away because of abnormally bad behavior. He had been returned and his mother being unable to cope with the child's abnormal disposition, efforts were being made to have him placed in an institution where he would have special care. It might be there discovered that some physical defect was responsible for his apparent viciousness. Another case was that of an unusually orphaned girl, whom Miss Ougheltree had sent to an orphan asylum in Albany, believing that such a decided change of environment would prove remedial. In one family, consisting of a widowed mother and two daughters, the fourteen-year-old girl on showing a marked tendency toward tuberculosis, was being provided with milk and fresh eggs, and summer work had been secured in the country for the mother, where the girl could accompany her, while the other daughter would be cared for by relatives. One especially interesting account was given of a family that had received a very small inheritance, and had showed remarkable thrift by paying their rent in advance, securing necessary food and clothing. Then came a relapse. The father took to drinking, a practice he was apt to indulge in when out of work. A very emphatic visit from the county agent, and then the aid of a former employer of the man, who had always been interested in the wife and children had put the man back at work, and conditions were again favorable. Other cases were reported on, and it was said that some of the Ruby families were improving materially, especially one family where both parents had been drunkards, and where now real home relations had been established, and very better living conditions. The last case mentioned was that of a family where both parents were feeble minded, one child had already been placed in a custodial asylum and now two others, boys of six and seven, Miss Ougheltree was trying to place in the same asylum. This brought the meeting to a close and a formal adjournment was taken.

In Recorder's Court.

John Collins was arrested on Thursday by Policeman Walker on the charge of being drunk and disorderly. He got a sentence of ten days in jail.

John Hinkley, arrested on complaint of his wife for non-support, pleaded not guilty and the case was adjourned for two weeks. He was also arrested by Policeman Walker on a warrant.

Work on Ferry Street.

LONDON FEARS ZEPPELIN RAID

By Telegram to The Freeman.

London, April 16.—Precautions taken here today indicated that the authorities fear a great Zeppelin raid upon London tonight. Special warnings were sent out that any notice to extinguish lights must be immediately obeyed under penalty of arrest.

To assist the police in enforcing this order and to prevent panic if the attack is made, the special force of 7,000 constables organized since the war began, were instructed to report at Scotland Yard at 5:30 this afternoon.

Weather conditions today were ideal for aerial operations and it was apparently the belief of the authorities that the long threatened attack of Zeppelins against the British capital was imminent. The raids of Thursday night and this morning were regarded in official circles as reconnoitering expeditions whose success would incite the Germans to a greater effort.

Burial With Military Honors.

After a battle the dead are buried "with military honors." These in times of peace are both impressive and elaborate, but in time of war they are much curtailed. The principal features are the playing by muffled drums of the dead march, the resting on the arms reversed by the troops engaged and the final firing into the air over the grave of three blank volleys. The number of volleys is always the same, but the number of men comprising the firing party increases with the rank of the deceased. A muffled drum is a drum the cords of which have been loosened so as to slacken the parchment head and cause it to give forth on being struck a dull, muffled sound.—London Straps.

Intellectual Life.

People without intellectual life are virtually under condemnation to hard labor. Unless their thoughts can give them wholesome occupation they must find it for their hands. Otherwise they cannot live well and must expect deterioration. But, unluckily for lazy people, the achievement of a good grade of intellectual life involves about as much work as anything else. Life without effort seems not to have been intended. The original plan was to have it end by starvation and, though people nowadays get around that, they cannot altogether defeat the original intention.—Life.

Swine In Old London.

We hear much today of the dangers of the London streets, but the inhabitants are spared some of the perils of an earlier age. The calendar of coroners' rolls for the city tells how the many swine wandering about the streets were once London's great nuisances. In 1822 an inquest was held on a child who was attacked in her cradle by a pig which had wandered in through the open door of her parents' shop. And a little earlier letters patent were issued to an infant who lost an ear from the same cause. The letters certified the cause of the accident, lest later on the uncharitable should say that the ear had been cut off in the pillory by the knife of the law.—London Spectator.

A Long Popular Vegetable.

Asparagus has evidently been known during a considerable period, for it figures in the title of a seventeenth century play. Richard Brome, who started life as a domestic servant and in that capacity had Ben Jonson for a master, became a popular dramatist, and one of the most successful of his comedies was "The Sparagus Garden." acted, according to the title page of the edition published in 1640, "by the Company of Revels at Salisbury Court." One of the characters in this play expresses a wish to have "sparagus at every meal all the year long."—London Globe.

A Happy Discovery

By RUTH GRAHAM

John Mason, a young man of fortune, devoted a great deal of his time and money to charitable work. He visited hospitals and not only inquired into things needed, but sat down beside patients, asked what he could do for them and occasionally chatted with one familiarly.

Mason was a man of liberal education and literary tastes. There was an old gentleman named Gorham in whom the young man became interested. Gorham having been in his younger days a publisher when magazines were exponents of literary productions and not advertising mediums. Gorham had published the writings of literary lights who flourished in the earlier part of the nineteenth century and had many interesting stories to tell concerning authors. To these Mason listened with great relish.

Gorham had in those days been wealthy and at the time of his greatest prosperity had ridden to and from his office. He had a good wife, but one thing he had not, children. The husband was so engrossed in his business that he did not miss the absence of offspring so much as his wife, who longed for a child and would not be comforted without one. Finally with her husband's consent she went to a foundling asylum and took therefrom a baby boy.

The clothing in which the child had been received was of the finest texture, and there was every indication that he had been born of refined parents. He was adopted by the Gorhams and brought up as their son, taking the name of his foster father, Henry Gorham. He became the idol of his foster mother, who lavished every attention upon him.

When the boy was becoming old enough to be of still more interest to the Gorhams he suddenly disappeared. His nurse one morning left him on the porch in front of the house for a few minutes and when she returned he was gone. The foster parents spent no end of money to find him, but received no trace of him. The blow almost killed Mrs. Gorham. Her husband begged her to adopt another child, but she would not. Little Harry had wound himself around her heart and she would not, or rather felt that she could not, replace him with another.

In time misfortune came to the Gorhams. Henry Gorham, not content with his success in the publishing business, launched forth in various speculations. For a time he was successful; then several of them collapsed at once. His publishing business was carried down with them, and from affluence he and his wife fell into poverty. Then came old age, when men have neither the strength nor daring to begin anew. And lastly Henry Gorham fell ill with a lingering disease.

An old friend, an author, whom Gorham had launched on a successful career by his appreciation of his literary works and who had accumulated a small fortune provided an income for the old couple, which was barely sufficient to keep them in a small house and provide them with food and clothing. When Gorham fell ill he needed medical attendance and nursing, which he could get only at a hospital. He was removed to one, and his benefactor paid the additional expense.

One day John Mason on calling at the hospital found his old friend in great mental misery. The man who had been paying his way had died suddenly, and his widow had refused to continue his benefaction. Mason offered to stand in the place of the benefactor. His offer was a great relief to the invalid, who asked him to go and see his wife and tell her the good news.

Mason had not happened to meet Mrs. Gorham when she had called to see her husband. He acceded to the old man's request and, visiting the lady in her humble abode, begged her not to worry, assuring her that he would continue the income she and her husband had been receiving.

From the moment Mason entered Mrs. Gorham's presence her eyes were fixed upon his with a singular expression. He accompanied his offer with a smile, which intensified this look on the old lady's face. Throwing up her hands and her eyes at the same time, she exclaimed:

"Oh, heavens, how like Harry!" Naturally Mason asked who was Harry and was told for the first time the story of her lost foster son. Mason listened with an interest far more intense than might have been expected. At the end of his recital he said musingly:

"Can it be possible that?" He paused and on being asked to finish said that his mother had married without her father's consent. When a baby he had been left at a foundling asylum. His grandfather, after his father's and mother's death, which had occurred in quick succession, had traced him to the home and from there to the people who had adopted him. Fearing that he would not be given up, the grandfather employed persons to kidnap him.

Mason had no sooner told his story before he was clasped in his foster mother's arms.

The next day there was a great change in the condition of the Gorhams. They were removed to John Mason's home, where they received every comfort, attention and luxury, for John Mason had inherited a large fortune from his grandfather, which he lavished on them without stint.

Intellectual Conviction.

The phrase "intellectual conviction" is misleading. There can be no conviction (or mental conclusion) without the intellect. One may have a notion born of fancy, or a sentiment arising from desire; but a conviction means the result of a logical process—a process which is, from beginning to end, an affair of intellect, and nothing else.

Secret of the Lost Will

Repentant Woman Risks Her Life to Make Atonement

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Seems to me," reflected Abner Rudd as he gazed up at the white steeple of the Central church—"seems to me that there steeple is off the perpendicular."

"Abner, I wish you wouldn't use such long words," complained his wife. "What's the matter with the steeple?"

"It leans to one side."

"Why didn't you say so then?" Lizzie Rudd squinted up at the tall steeple, on whose pinnacle whirled a gilded weather vane. "Abner, it is teetering!" she shrieked as a gust of wind roared through the trees.

"Not yet. But it might fall if we had a stiff gale. Come along, Lizzie!"

The Rudds, frail, elderly people, scudded before the wind that was blowing up from the sea.

When they were in the warm coziness of their own house Lizzie dropped her heavy shawl to the floor and turned a pale, resolute face to her husband.

"If the steeple should blow over what would happen?" she asked.

Abner rubbed his chin.

"Why, Lizzie, it would blow over, that's all."

"You mean it would break off?"

"I suppose so."

"And the bell and anything else inside would fall out?"

"Of course. What makes you act so foolish? You know the steeple's been shaky for ten years."

"I'm afraid," suddenly whispered Lizzie, covering her face with her toil worn hands.

"Stop that nonsense, Lizzie Rudd," commanded her husband sternly. "Air we going to have any supper tonight?"

Lizzie prepared the evening meal in silence, occasionally pausing to peer from the window at the church steeple, visible through the leafless trees.

After supper Abner lit his pipe and picked up the weekly newspaper. Lizzie knitted nervously until a knock sounded at the back door.

She admitted a little apple-cheeked woman who tossed her wraps aside, brought out a sewing bag and began to crochet lace with fiercely rapid movements of arms and fingers, elbows and chin.

While she knitted Dilly Morgan talked breathlessly:

"S'pose you think it's funny I dropped in tonight, but says I to Enoch like as not they haven't heard the news and I'll—"

"Has the steeple fallen?" cut in Lizzie.

"Good land, no! How you do take one up, Lizzie Rudd! But it's funny—I was just going to tell you about her and her Uncle Joseph being sexton of Central church and all!"

LIZZIE BENT HER HEAD TO THE FIERCE WIND AND TURNED INTO A NARROW LANE.

"Who you talking about, Dilly?" interrupted Lizzie, leaning forward with burning eyes.

"The other woman stared and then resumed her knitting."

"Talking about Cynthia Coles," she snapped.

"What about her?"

"Took her to the almshouse today."

"Who did?"

"Enoch, of course."

"What for?"

"Because she's a pauper—town poor—as if every one in Beaufort didn't know. It's a shame, Cynthia being crippled and all—seems a shame her Uncle Joseph didn't leave his money to her instead of to Central church."

"Folks said he made a later will leaving everything to Cynthia, only it couldn't be found after his death," put in Abner Rudd.

"If he had, where is it?" sniffed Dilly, jabbing her shining needles in and out of the scarlet yarn. "Where is it, says I, when it ought to be found so's the poor crippled girl he bring up can take some comfort. It makes my blood boil to think of Cynthia Coles in the poorhouse—if we could afford it, she should stay with us, but law, Enoch has his hands full as 'tis!"

Lizzie Rudd knitted on in stony silence. Her husband continued to talk to Dilly about Cynthia Coles and how lucky she had been to find a place as seamstress with the rich Higginbothams.

Cynthia had lived there for fifteen years after her uncle's death when Mrs. Higginbotham died and her husband and sons started on a voyage around the world.

So Cynthia was adrift once more, and a long period of sickness devoured her savings, so that now, weak and forlorn, she had been taken to the only refuge offered—

The poorhouse!

And Cynthia's Uncle Joseph had left $15,000 to the Central church and had cut off Cynthia without even a shilling.

"I'll bet he made another will and it's never been found," ended Abner.

"That's what I think," agreed Dilly. "Funny you never heard anything about it, Lizzie; you and Cynthia were very intimate about that time."

Lizzie smiled in a ghastly way.

"We were intimate. We had a falling out just before her Uncle Joseph died; we never spoke since. I'm—I'm sorry she's in the poorhouse."

"It's all the fault of her uncle," decided Dilly, as she thrust her face into its bag and picked up her shawl. "I'm going along now. I thought you'd like to hear about Cynthia. They say the church steeple will fall before morning. They ought to have used some of Joseph's money to build a new one. Funny, ain't it, that the steeple should fall and that Cynthia should go to the poorhouse all on the same day?"

Long after the Rudds went to bed that night Lizzie lay awake staring at the darkness and listening for the crash of the church steeple before some sudden onslaught of the wild March wind.

It was an hour after midnight when Lizzie Rudd stole from her home. She was fully dressed, and her going was unsuspected by her sleeping husband.

If he missed her he would think she had gone across the hall to sleep in the spare chamber where the wind's roar was not so disturbing.

Lizzie bent her head to the fierce wind and turned into a narrow lane opposite her home. By devious, lonely ways this lane led to the almshouse. A hundred times she stopped short in terror at some startling sound, but always she argued her fears away and at last reached the barren grounds surrounding the almshouse.

Here and there a lighted window indicated the hallways of the institution. Lizzie tried to remember where Dilly had said Cynthia Coles had been placed.

"I know Dilly said Cynthia could see the sunset. She said something about the butternut tree too. It must be hereabouts!" Lizzie picked up a handful of pebbles.

But it was not necessary for her to awaken Cynthia Coles.

The new guest of the county was sitting by a window. Lizzie recognized the great masses of Cynthia's white hair.

The window was open, and Cynthia was leaning out, lifting thinly clad arms to the unfeeling sky.

"O Lord, how long? How long?" Lizzie heard her voice above the wind.

"Cynthia!" called Lizzie, and the startled woman looked down.

"Who is it? What do you want?" she demanded.

Lizzie went to the window and held a whispered conversation; then Cynthia vanished to reappear with a bundle, which she tossed to the ground. She was now gowned and bonneted in her best.

Somehow, she climbed to the window sill, and with Lizzie Rudd's assistance scrambled to the ground.

Lizzie picked up the bundle and handed Cynthia her crutch.

Then they disappeared in the darkness; Lizzie Rudd strangely light hearted, and Cynthia Coles hopping along like a canary bird beside her. When they reached the Central church Lizzie Rudd stopped short.

"Cynthia, you remember that time we quarreled? I was jealous of you and Abner," she asked.

Cynthia laughed.

"Of course I remember it. You were foolish, Lizzie, because Abner never looked twice at any woman except you, and you harbored resentment all the years. I didn't see how you could, Lizzie, you had so much!" Cynthia's voice was wistful.

"I was poor in spirit. I was downright wicked. Listen, Cynthia, I had a bad temper. The very day we quarreled your Uncle Joseph gave me a long envelope. Says he: 'Lizzie, you and Cynthia are good friends. You keep this paper—it's my will—and if anything happens to me you take it to Lawyer Smith.'

"I was coming out of the church at the time, your Uncle Joseph being sexton, you know, and I took the paper and said I would. I just went racing up the stairs to the bell tower in the steeple. I thought up here, with the wind blowing through the little windows, I can be cool and calm and forgive Cynthia."

"When I reached the steeple I looked out, and the first thing I saw was you and Abner walking past. I was so mad I just jammed that envelope into a hole in the rafters, and I've been afraid to tell about it ever since."

"But now you wait here, Cynthia, while I fetch it to you; then you shall come home with me, and in the morning you can take the will to the lawyer, and if you want to send me to prison you can."

Like a flash Lizzie Rudd darted away, and Cynthia, half dazed by the confession which had laid heavily upon Mrs. Rudd for fifteen years, shrank into the shelter of a tree trunk and watched her companion.

Clouds scudded across the sky, revealing the moon riding high in the heavens.

Lizzie Rudd was plainly discernible in the moonlight.

She entered the church, opened the door to the stairway and scrambled up its narrow, dusty way.

It was a terrifying experience for Lizzie Rudd.

She passed the organ loft and the gallery and entered that other door which led up a steep ladder-like staircase to the bell tower.

The wind rushed through the steeple, which creaked and swayed with each gust.

Tom Corwin's Retort.

A brilliant sally may extricate a man from a perilous position where all else would fail. Tom Corwin furnishes an example. He was so dark skinned that he was sometimes mistaken for a mulatto. Once while addressing a Whig mass meeting at Marietta, O., he was taking special pains not to say anything that could offend the abolitionists, who were just then getting strong enough to make and unmake politicians. A sharp witted opponent in order to put him in an embarrassing position asked, "Shouldn't negroes be permitted to sit at the table and eat with white folks on steamboats and at hotels?"

That seemed to be a poser. If Corwin answered yes the pro-slavery men would "knife" him. If he answered no the abolitionists would defeat him. Answering neither yea or nay, he turned like a flash.

"Fellow citizens," he replied, with his dark and mobile face lighting up with merriment, "I demand of you whether it is proper to ask such a question of a gentleman of my color?"

The crowd yelled with delight, and Black Tom carried the day.—Cham Clark in Youth's Companion.

Courage.

"Tis easy to sit in the boat and glide While your brother pulls the oar; 'Tis easy to lie by the mountain side And watch the eagle soar; 'Tis easy to laugh while the sun shines bright And to dance while the harpings play. But can you smile when you hear the dirge Or laugh on the darkest days?"

Let us learn to be sturdy and strong like the oak Through tempest and gale and snow And, though we be crushed and broken and bent,

Still always stronger grow, And, like the pine on yonder hills, Though the storm be wild and fierce, Let us upward strive with courage rare And strive the clouds to pierce.

—Maud L. Johnson.

They Knew Who He Wasn't.

Colonel George Harvey, the famous editor, according to the story they tell, visited his native Peacham a short time after his first brilliant New York success and, on a cold winter morning, entered the Peacham general store.

But nobody, to his surprise, knew him. Colonel Harvey, seated with the Peacham veterans around the hot stove, could not resist telling one or two of his minor metropolitan successes—successes which the Peachamites heard in a cold silence.

"And I, too, am a Peacham boy," said Colonel Harvey. "Yet nobody remembers me here. Strange!"

He turned warmly to an old man with red chin whiskers striped with gray.

"You," he said, "are George Slocum."

He turned to another old man who had very large, white, even false teeth.

"You are George R. Boone," he said. Then he turned to the whole circle of veterans round the stove and cried impulsively:

"Somebody, surely, must remember my name. Come now, think! It's George—George—George!"

"Waal, jedgin' from them tales ye bin a-givin' us," snorted an old fellow in gum boots, "I reckon it ain't George Washington, nowhow."—Washington Star.

Not a Bell Rope.

A young man while traveling on the east coast of Scotland entered a small inn to get some refreshments. The barroom was empty; no one seemed to be about. So, going over to what he took to be the bell rope, hanging from the ceiling, he tugged it violently, just to show that he was being neglected. The next moment the landlady came screaming down the stair in a towering rage.

"What dae ye mean, ye daft idiot!" she cried. "Dae ye no ken that rope's tied to the cradle, and ye've thrown the bairn out?"

Gilbert's Wit.

At the Crystal Palace one evening I had the pleasure of being seated next to W. S. Gilbert of Gilbert and Sullivan fame, at a banquet, where Burnand, editor of Punch, was chairman. Burnand, I was told, was very jealous of Gilbert, which became rather apparent as the banquet progressed, both he and Gilbert indulging in several combats of repartee.

Gilbert was telling us a rather amusing incident at which we were all laughing very decidedly, when Burnand shouted down the line of diners, "Are you chaps laughing at those funny sayings of Gilbert, which he sends to Punch and never gets in?"

Gilbert quickly replied, "I do not know who sends the funny things to Punch, but I do know that they never get in."

Gilbert was once asked his opinion of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's performance of Hamlet. "Well," he said, "it was very, very funny, and not at all vulgar."—"Nat Goodwin's Book."

Three Reasons For Declining.

Lord Broughton had a temper which sometimes exploded in a most disconcerting manner. It is related that on one occasion he dined with a large party at Thackeray's house, and after dinner some specially fine madeira was produced. In his usual genial way the novelist pressed this on his guests and, patting his neighbor, Lord Broughton, on the back, remarked, "Now, my dear old boy, you must try some of this."

A chill fell on the company when the noble lord retorted, "I am not your dear boy, I am not old, and — your wine."

A Timely Question.

"Love me and the world is mine," said the impassioned youth.

"Do be sensible, Henry," replied the practical girl. "I care not for the world. Tell me whether or not there is any permanency attached to your job."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

JUST AS LIZZIE REACHED THE PORCH THERE WAS A CRASH.

come out, but she would have made restitution after fifteen years of wrongdoing.

She groped her way past the shadowy bulk of the great bell to the northeast corner of the tower. Here she thrust an arm into a crevice in the unplastered walls and drew out a dry, crackling paper.

It was the missing will.

Prayers of gratitude bubbled on her lips as she went down the stairs.

The steeple creaked and strained against the gale, and just as Lizzie reached the porch there was an ear splitting crackling crash as the steeple of Central church fulfilled popular expectation, and breaking off above the porch, toppled into the churchyard.

Lizzie Rudd joined the startled Cynthia under the tree.

"Here it is," she said, thrusting the will into Cynthia's hand. "Let's get home and to bed before the crowd comes."

Cynthia took Lizzie by the thin shoulders and peered into her face.

"When you went up after this will did you know the steeple might fall?"

Lizzie made no reply, but Cynthia was satisfied.

She kissed Mrs. Rudd warmly.

"Don't you worry, dear," she said earnestly. "You've wiped out the sin."

And when Dilly Morgan hinted that Lizzie Rudd's renewed intimacy with Cynthia Coles dated from the time Uncle Joseph's later will was found, which made Cynthia his sole heir, Cynthia and Lizzie Rudd only smiled contentedly.

They understood.

A Famous Quotation.

A story about Keats is quoted by the late Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson in his "Lives" of disciples of Aesculapius. Mr. Stephens, a friend of the doctor, once told him that one evening at twilight when he and Keats were sitting together in their student days, Stephens at his medical books, Keats engrossed in his dreaming, Keats called out to his friend that he had composed a new line—"A thing of beauty is a constant joy."

"What think you of that, Stephens?"

"It has the true ring, but is wanting in some way," replies the latter as he dips once more into his medical studies.

An interval of silence, and again the poet, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." What think you of that, Stephens?"

"That it will live forever."

A happy prophecy indeed!

The watch was kept in the following order: "Tuesday, the drapers and the tailors; Wednesday, the mercers and the apothecaries; Thursday, the fishmongers and the butchers; Friday, the pewterers and the vintners; Saturday, the goldsmiths and the saddlers; Sunday, the ironmongers, the armorers and the cutlers; Monday, the tawers, the spurrers, the bowyers and the girdlers."

CLEANUP POSTCARDS.

An Effective Novelty First Used in a St. Paul Crusade.

Cleanup postcards are a novelty introduced in St. Paul.

No less than 40,000 were mailed to persons a year ago, and this year probably double that number will be utilized. The cards, with appropriate illustrations and text or with text alone, prove very effective in getting volunteer cleaners into action.

The cost of printing them is very low. They can be either mailed or distributed by individual workers.

Choosing Colors For Houses.

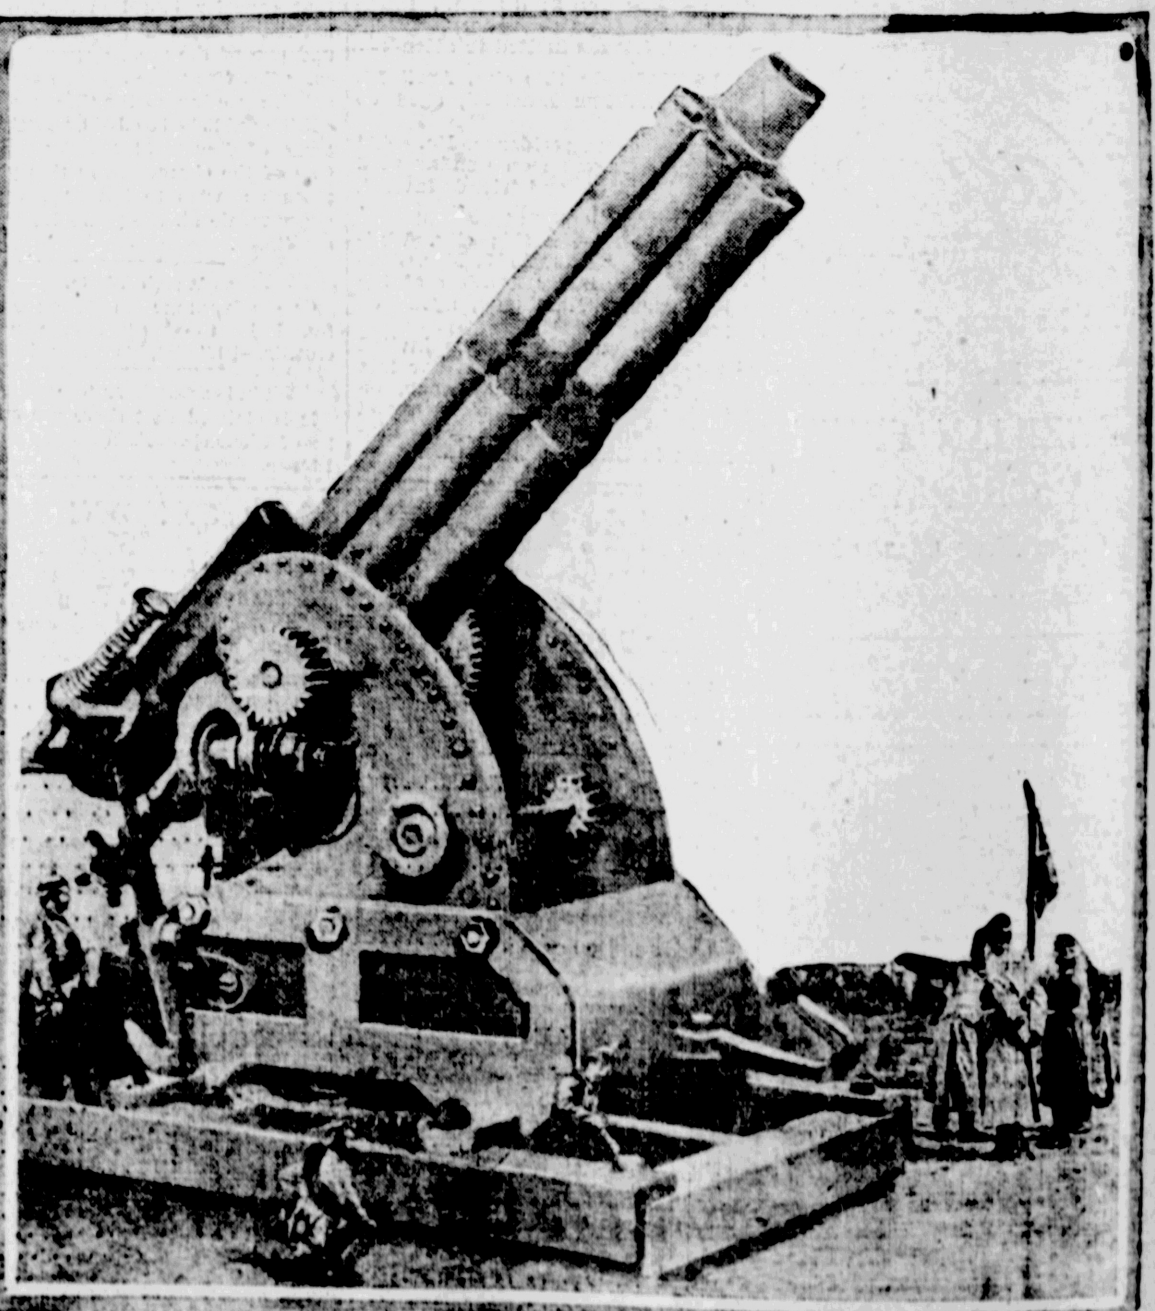

The safe colors for a house besides red are white, gray, yellow and brown, says a writer in Scribner's. Yellow or gray, with white trimmings, suits many a plain pitch roofed or square colonial house. Grays and browns are good for ugly nondescript ones, the grays always being pleasanter on the yellow shades than on cold blue tones. White suggests the formal type again. It is a very good color for a country house, showing it up from a distance in fascinating glimpses, for it needs trees about it and flowers to sparkle against its walls. Such a house will be attractive when the leaves are gone from the trees, for the bare boughs will serve to soften the effect.

James I. and Soap.

James I. was actively interested in the soap industry. In return for a payment of 25 per cent on all soap produced James granted the Company of Soap-makers of Westminster the monopoly for the making of soap in England. The importation of soap was forbidden, and officers were appointed to deal with illicit soap boiling, its manufacture, even in private houses for domestic purposes, being punishable by heavy penalties. Moreover, a proclamation was issued announcing that "the soap made by the company is good, sweet and serviceable for our people." The annual revenue drawn by the king from this source amounted to about £30,000.—London Express.

Reminders of Stagecoaches.

The four feet eight and one-half inch gauge is not the only "horse" reminder on English railways. The coaching is still remembered in the "guard" of a train, the "booking office" and in the "coaches" themselves. And "horse" power is still our measure of strength, as candle power perpetuates in an age of electricity the lighting methods of an older time. Steamers "sail" and the "sets," in popular language, against the facts that every schoolboy knows. And a candidate who swoops down on a constituency from afar, is he not still a "carpetbagger"? Now, where will we see such an article nowadays unless it be as a carpenter's holdall?—London Answers.

MENKE'S DAILY
SPORTING LETTER

(By Frank G. Menke.)

That much talked of Packey McFarland-Mike Gibbons bout will be worth going miles to see if it is ever staged. And the prospects at this writing are that it will be staged within the next two or three months. McFarland and Gibbons rank as the two greatest boxers in the game. They are the two brainiest, the two greatest ring generals. Both are masters of the mitt game, both are Irish, both are game, and both can fight.

If the pair ever meet it promises to be a real fight. There has been a bit of ill feeling between the two for several years and this has been increased by hurling of defies at each other.

McFarland once was a lightweight but he passed from that class many years ago. Although he has been fighting lightweights during that period.

The probable cause of Jimmy Clabby's weakness in his right mitt is explained by Tom Andrews of Milwaukee.

About three years ago, Clabby came to Paris from Australia. I happened to be there at the time with Mrs. Andrews. We got up a dinner party and as we were leaving the hotel two negroes were standing on the sidewalk. One of them, a huge fellow, made some remark about the ladies.

Quick as a flash Clabby jumped over to the two negroes and demanded an instant apology.

The larger negro of the two made a sneering refusal. Hardly had he finished his sneer when Clabby sent a terrific right hand punch to the mouth. The negro went down in a heap.

The other negro had a cane and was just at the point of landing on Clabby's head when one of the other chaps in our party jumped in and engaged the second negro. A few seconds later the second negro staggered to his feet. Then it was that Clabby hit him again with his right and I think that was the punch that hurt Clabby's hand. The negro went catapulating to the gutter and he took the count six times over.

Later Clabby said his hand hurt him, and since then it has been his trouble.

After Freddie Welsh has drawn down about $200,000 in American money he probably will risk losing his title in a finish fight with Willie Ritchie—if Ritchie is still a lightweight at the time.

The American public has clamored for a Ritchie-Welsh bout ever since Welsh won in London last summer. Welsh partially assured the call by granting Ritchie a 10 round chance at him in New York. Welsh gambled on the chance of staying off a Ritchie knockout punch—and he won. Ritchie outclassed Welsh in that bout but it was a no-decision affair and Welsh retains the championship.

ROYAL RECEPTION TO PYTHIAN OFFICERS

never appeared so utterly boundless as now. All that has been achieved, all the grand results that are recorded are but an atom in the balance weighed when brought against and compared with the possibilities of the future. The ever-accelerating progress of fraternity we have seen, but it has such strength and such deep-centered force within it that the present and the people of the present and the past have been unable to completely unfold it.

The world is now at one of its critical points. Such condition exists partly because brotherhood of man and fraternalism are not now of sufficient strength to overcome, conquer and repress counter feelings. The world does not live as yet by fraternal exchange, although a goodly part does. Unfortunately, mankind is not always moved and guided by the thought that you see through me and I through you. All do not realize or recognize the holy law that man owes himself to man. Now, wouldn't it be wonderful if a gale of friendship and of fraternalism could develop in this country and sweep across the Atlantic and invade and envelop Europe and set fire to the hearts and minds of all upon European soil, and burn out all enmity and hatred.

We can all stand in the valley if we will, but we will find our horizon near. If we climb the fraternal hills we will find our view expanded. Ascend the heights and leave behind the narrow, barren and dry thoughts and feelings and see life green and growing, fruitful and joyful. See this golden fraternity gracing the path of the weary. See it give a luster to the tear-dimmed eye. See it impart a throb of comfort to the aching heart. Observe how the true practice of it fills life with a song. When the world or our work is sometimes hard and unimpassioned, now it substitutes lighter and brighter shades to the colors of life. See how glittering and brilliant it is in the shadow as well as in the sunshine, and in the darkness as in the light. See how it spreads freshness over the paths of those who follow its colors and who live in the joy of its friendship. We all hope we must all hope that the future will continue to see an interminable succession of advances in fraternalism which shall continually add to the sum of human happiness and continually make a better and a brighter world.

Tonight we have here the grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and other grand officers of the Domain of New York, and we have the supreme representative. Their presence alone would make this meeting worthy of note. We have ascended the heights of fraternalism to its very pinnacle, however, and we have a national, yes, an international representative in the personage of the supreme chancellor of the Knights of Pythias of the world. He is entrusted with almost a world-wide mission, and he is a world-wide exponent of one of the great branches of fraternalism. Recognizing the worth of the distinguished visitors and the worth of that which they represent, I sincerely extend to them greetings of welcome from the city of Kingston, and from the Knights of Pythias of the city and vicinity, and from the various orders and lodges represented here, and I heartily and earnestly bid them welcome, and I carry to them the songs of welcome and good wishes that is in the hearts of all of us.

Brother Arthur Rifenbary sang a solo in pleasing style and Mr. Grossman was then introduced. He paid a high compliment to Franklin Lodge for the arrangements that had been made for the reception of the visitors. He sketched in vivid words the principles of the order on which it was founded and of the growth of the order which is the third largest order in this country. He said that millions of dollars have been given to the widows and that sunshine had been brought into homes pervaded with gloom and men have been made to feel the touch of brotherhood.

After a selection by the Y. M. C. A. Glee Club the supreme head of the order, Mr. Young, was introduced and was greeted with prolonged applause. Mr. Young illustrated his address with a number of humorous stories. He said that the order in brief stood for manly men and the purity of the home. He spoke of the work the order has accomplished since its institution and spoke of the principles that it installed into its members, the love of country and of home and of the word of God which was found in every lodge room of the order. He spoke of the vast sums of money that the order had paid out from its insurance department and of the magnificent homes that the order had established throughout the country. He told the story of an old colored woman who just before her death had asked her friend to be sure and plant a watermelon vine on her grave and then when the melons were ripe to visit the grave, but not to eat the watermelons but "just to scrunch them up so that the juice would trickle down through the ground." The principles of the order of Pythias trickled through the hearts of its members and made their lives more noble and drove out selfishness and instilled patriotism and love of home and country. The order stood for optimism. As the old lady said who had but two teeth in her mouth, "I thank heaven that they bit."

He told the story of the old Pythian brother who was deaf in one ear and who came home late from lodge one evening and as he was about to receive the lecture that all of the Pythians at one time or another had probably heard he laid his head on the pillow with the good ear down and said "go ahead now and talk, I am going to sleep." The work of the order in its initiation was one that would never be forgotten. He said that the beautiful ritual used was written by a man whose heart was consecrated to the work and that next to the Bible to which it was a companion in every lodge room it was the finest book in the world. He said that there was a young Dutchman once that wanted to join a lodge and the night rolled around for him to take his degree. As he climbed the stairs leading to the lodge rooms he stumbled and fell headlong to the floor and rolled into a huge wood pile and it came clattering down upon him. The brothers hearing the racket rushed out of the lodge rooms and peering down saw him picking himself slowly up and as he limped slowly away they asked him if he was hurt. "No," he replied, "I come back next week for the rest."

Mr. Young not only told funny stories to illustrate his points but he intermingled humor and pathos with a skilled hand. He spoke for over an hour and a half but he held the close attention of his audience.

The exercises were brought to a close with the singing of America by the Y. M. C. A. Glee Club and the audience standing. The Glee Club added much to the enjoyment of the evening with their fine selections.

Not only were Knights of Pythias present but a large delegation from the American Mechanics and the Patriotic Order of Sons of America were also present and occupied seats in front. Among those seen in the audience were Cordie A. Craig, Herbert Van Deusen, Sanford Van Deusen, Lorenzo Dietz, William Bell, Charles Lebert, James Hutton, Francis C. Merritt, Joel Christiana, Alva Eckert, Festus Cook, Walter Riel, Myron Beardsley, Norman Longendyke, Ward Tongue, George Zelliff, A. Bedford, John Reinhardt, Harry Van Buren, William Van Gaasbeek, Irving Myers, Earl Schoonmaker, Harry Watts, W. W. Miller, Edward Herriek, Earl Simpson, Edward Leverett, Harold Feldman, Harry Tallmadge, Sidney Feldman, Herbert Myers, Edgar White, Jasper Kelder, Arthur Longyear, Clay Sikes, William Freer, Benjamin Van Demark, William Lear, Grant Cole, D. W. Benton, Walton Davis, Sheriff Shultis, William Purham, Hiram Wood, O. M. Kennedy, Chauncey Smith, Samuel Messinger, Albert Plough, Otis Rider, Wilson LeFevre, Vernon J. Faulkner, H. P. Stickle, Charles E. Bishop, Robert Riddick, Merrill DuBois, Fred DuBois, George Green, Herman Erbe and John Renus.

At the close of the meeting many of the brothers attended the lodge rooms of Franklin Lodge, where a social hour was enjoyed and refreshments served.

The day will go down in fraternal history as one of the most successful ever held in Ulster county and Franklin Lodge and its officers who arranged for the meeting deserve credit for its success.
